COUNTY BOARD DEMANDS SHAKEUP AT TOWER AS FAIR AND AIKEN ELUDE WIDESPREAD HUNT

Mrs. Phoebe Omlie Leads Ladybirds Into Atlanta

MEMPHIS FLYER MAINTAINS PACE AHEAD OF FIELD

Intrepid Pilot Completes Fourth Lap in Women's Dixie Derby in Fast Time.

VERA DAWN WALKER ARRIVAL DELAYED

California Aviatrix Only One of Six Contestants to Encounter Motor Trouble.

BY RILEY McKOY.

Amid the cheering of more than a thousand spectators and the excited waving of straw hats of officials, Mrs. Phoebe Omlie, of Memphis, first southern woman to win a pilot's license, brought her tiny monocoupe cabin airplane to rest on Candler field Saturday afternoon, leading the field in the Dixie Air Derby, the first woman's race ever to touch Atlanta.

She landed at exactly 6 minutes and 15 seconds after 3 o'clock, bringing to a close for her, the second day of the air derby that started from Washington the day before.

The other fliers to arrive here in order were: Mrs. Martie Bowman, of Hempstead, L. I., 3:30:05; Miss Laura Ingalls, St. Louis, 3.32.35; Miss Nancy Hopkins, Garden City, L. I.; 4:23:43, and Mrs. Charity Langdon, Norfolk, Va., 4:36:55. Miss Vera Dawn Walker, of Los Angeles, forced down before reaching Columbia, did not arrive in the afternoon and is expected early this morning.

Leaving Raleigh, N. C., Saturday morning with a lead of 9 minutes over her nearest competitor, Mrs. Omlie, who, though from Memphis, is listed on the derby records as being from Moline, Ill., increased her time over her rivals steadily throughout the day. Her elapsed time from Columbia, S. C., where the lady-fliers had lunch, to Candler field, was 1:35:15, gaining for her 27 minutes.

Pace Setters First.

R. C. Oertel, derby chairman for the National Air Race committee, and W. C. Bauer, in the pace-setting ship, arrived at the field Saturday before any of the fliers. They were flying a Lockheed Vega. Both men stated that since the beginning of the derby that Mrs. Omlie, averaging 175 miles an hour, had been "pushing" the path-finding plane hard.

Mrs. Omlie stated on arrival that she had been fighting a headwind all of the way from Columbia, and immediately turned her plane over to mechanics for minor repairs to the cowling, which she said was loose and needed welding. She added that, though strenuous, the trip had not tired her.

The route of the 1,600-mile cross-country race was from Washington to Raleigh, thence to Columbia, Atlanta and from here to Birmingham, Memphis and Chicago to the scene of the national air races now in progress there. Mrs. Omlie's time record from control to control, including her arrival at Candler field, is as follows: 0:38:0, 0:55:7, 1:22:58 and 1:35:15, making a total of 4:31:20. She was the first to leave Columbia and the first to arrive here. Her ship is painted yellow and bears a large No. 8.

The other entrants left at intervals of one minute each and Mrs. Leslie Bowman, better known as "Martie," of Hempstead, Long Island, flying a Fleet numbered 53, took off in third place, but arrived second at Candler field. She crossed the finish line at 3:30:05 with an elapsed time of 1:57:05. She is the next nearest competitor to Mrs. Omlie with a total elapsed time from Washington of 6:25:49.

Loses Maps.

En route to Atlanta she lost her maps and was forced down at Charlotte to get her bearings. She also encountered headwinds but had no motor trouble. Her time from control to control since leaving Washington reads: 0:47:55; 1:23:19; 2:17:30, and 1:57:05.

Nearly all of the lady-birds had difficulty in making the hop from Columbia, either getting lost or being forced down. Miss Laura Ingalls, of St. Louis, Mo., piloting a Gypsy Moth, was the last to leave Columbia but arrived here in third place both for the derby and for the hop to Atlanta. She arrived at 3:32:35, with an elapsed time from Columbia of 1:57:35.

Miss Ingalls stated that she lost her bearings and went by Spartanburg, which is not on the route. She was forced to replenish her supply of gasoline there. She is the holder of the women's record for consecutive loops, made recently, and after swooping down across the finish line she climbed back into the heavens and gave the large gallery of spectators thrill after thrill as she put her ship

CONTEMPT ORDER FROM HUMPHRIES NAMES HOLLAND

Failure To Submit County Employes' Contribution List Basis of Court Action.

Resulting, it is alleged, from an act of defiance aimed at the grand jury in its efforts to obtain information bearing on a county employe fund during the March primary, C. M. Holland, Fulton county purchasing agent, Saturday was cited for contempt of court by Foreman T. J. Lyon. Judge John D. Humphries has ordered Holland to appear in court Tuesday morning to show cause why the citation should not stand.

In his petition, alleging contempt, the grand jury foreman sets forth that Holland, as treasurer of a fund raised by employes of the county to help defray expenses of certain county commissioners, refused to submit the listed names of such employes contributing when demanded by the grand jury.

The petition further alleges approximately $7,000 was thus raised by county employe contribution and that this sum was expended in the primary. It is the opinion of the jurors, Lyon asserts, that improper use was made of the money, and he charges Holland's alleged refusal to turn over a list of the contributors constitutes contempt of court.

Fulton county grand jury has on several occasions shown a disposition to probe into county affairs, and the preceding grand jury did investigate alleged frauds in the March primary, in which Dr. W. L. Gilbert, Paul S. Etheridge and Walter C. Hendrix were the successful candidates for nomination as county commissioners.

The grand jury, however, did not return any indictments, and a petition brought by the three unsuccessful candidates in the commissioners' race, Alex Whitley, Nelson T. Spratt and Dan Griffith, seeking to gain access to the ballot boxes, was denied last week by Judge Edgar E. Pomeroy.

Margaret Woodside Is Wounded Seriously

Miss Margaret Woodside, 16, daughter of John J. Woodside, Jr., Saturday night was waging a battle for her life at St. Joseph's infirmary following a gunshot wound, self-inflicted Friday when she accidently touched the weapon.

The accident occurred at the Woodside residence, 125 Fifteenth street, and, according to Mr. Woodside, the gun had not been discharged for half a dozen years until it accidentally fired Friday night, with such serious results.

Locked in Mrs. Woodside's safe since the death of her husband, to whom it belonged, it had not been removed until the safe was opened several days ago for the storing of some jewelry.

When the jewels were taken out several days later, the pistol also was removed and laid on a mantelpiece.

Touching it Friday night, probably with the intention of moving it from the mantel to some safer place, Miss Woodside accidentally caused it to fire, the 32-calibre bullet passing directly through the viscera, puncturing the liver in two places as well as the kidneys and intestines.

Doctors Saturday night held out hope for her recovery despite her critical condition.

With Count Incomplete, Publisher Leads "Ma" Ferguson by More Than 75,000 Votes.

DALLAS, Texas, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Ross S. Sterling, of Houston, who made millions in the Texas oil fields and dispensed a large part in various philanthropies, late tonight marched steadily toward victory in the run-off primary for the democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Mrs. Miriam A. (Ma) Ferguson, the state's first woman governor, who was defeated for re-election in 1926 by Governor Dan Moody, trailed the oil magnate substantially when approximately half the estimated total vote had been tubulated. The Houston man assumed the lead early in the night, as returns from the urban centers, admittedly Sterling strongholds, were reported; but returns from the rural sections reduced this lead somewhat and kept the hopes of Ferguson followers high.

Returns to the Texas election bureau at 10:30 p. m. from 234 out of 2[illegible] counties, including 72 complete, gave the following:

Mrs. Ferguson, 311,643; Sterling, 388,212.

Indications were that the vote would be the greatest in the history of Texas primaries, a record having been set in the first primary this summer when 11 candidates sought the democratic nomination for governor. Mrs. Ferguson led in that primary, and Sterling was second, and a run off primary was held between the two high candidates.

At 10 o'clock Governor Moody sent a telegram of congratulations to Sterling. He predicted Sterling, now state highway commission chairman, would lead Mrs. Ferguson by at least 75,000 votes and expressed belief the lead might go much higher.

While campaigning was nothing new to Mrs. Ferguson, and her husband, "Farmer Jim," it was different with Sterling, a novice in politics.

He is a bustling, bluff sort of person, and on the campaign platform proudly stated he did not learn to read and write until nearly 21.

He is owner and publisher of the Houston Post-Dispatch, one of the largest newspapers in Texas, and founded the Humble Oil Company. Business connections touch many spheres of business life in addition to journalism and oil.

In the only democratic congressional run-off race returns from the 10 of the 12 counties, two complete, in the thirteenth district, gave Guinn Williams, incumbent, 19,242 votes; B. D. Sartin, 17,459.

Hoover Camp To Hold Religious Services

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Sunday services are to be held at President Hoover's camp on the Rapidan, in Virginia, henceforth.

The president and Mrs. Hoover will attend the initial services Sunday.

The 100 marines, on guard there, camp attendants and guests are expected to comprise the weekly congregation.

A portable organ has been sent to the camp and the navy department will designate a chaplain to conduct services.

Jack Holt Injured.

TOMS RIVER, N. J., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Jack Holt, motion picture actor, who has been here during filming of an airship picture, was slightly injured today in an automobile accident. Witnesses said Holt's automobile collided with a traffic beacon and he was injured about the head.

Defeat Looms for 'Ma'

Mrs. Miriam A. "Ma" Ferguson, left, was trailing Ross Sterling, right, highway head and publisher, in belated returns of the Texas democratic run-off primary.

Air Derby Entrants Rest Overnight Here

Five of the six women air pilots entered in the Dixie Derby snapped at Candler Field Saturday in the order of their arrival here from Columbia, S. C. From left to right they are: Mrs. Phoebe Omlie, who is in the lead for elapsed time since leaving Washington en route to Chicago over a 1,600-mile route; Mrs. Martie Bowman, who arrived here second; Miss Laura Ingalls, holder of the world's record of loops for women; Miss Nancy Hopkins, who arrived fourth after coming down and inquiring of a farmer the way to Atlanta, and Mrs. Charity Langdon, last to arrive. The sixth flier,, Vera Dawn Walker had motor trouble before reaching Columbia and after setting out for Atlanta was forced down at Athens by darkness, Saturday night. Insert shows unusual picture of Mrs. Omlie crossing the white finish line at Candler Field at a speed of 135 miles an hour, giving her a lead of 27 minutes elapsed time over her nearest rival.

TWO MORE WOMEN HELD IN MURDER

Police Seek Taxi Driver as Key Witness in Nagal Death Mystery.

DARIEN, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—With two women in jail and a third under $500 bond as accessory before the fact, McIntosh county officers tonight were seeking a taxi driver by the name of Hamm as the "key" man in the mysterious disappearance of Frank Nagal, Washington (D. C.) interior decorator.

Lillian Rewis, 22, and Annie Rowe were arrested at Savannah today by local officers on warrants sworn out by Sheriff A. S. Poppell, of McIntosh county, who, with Deputy Sheriff J. H. Collins, returned with the women to Darien and placed them in the county jail.

Ruth Cross, the third woman held for the slaying of Nagal, was released on $500 bond yesterday. The Cross woman was arrested at Brunswick on August 14 on a warrant charging murder.

Sheriff Poppell said that Hamm, the taxicab driver, would, if located, furnish the missing link in the evidence which he has in his possession. It was reported, the sheriff said, that Hamm had died since 1928, the year Nagal disappeared, but he intended to continue his search until it was definitely established he was either dead or could be arrested.

Lillian Rewis, when arrested by Savannah officers, said she was not surprised at being taken into custody, but that she could not understand why a charge of murder had been placed against her. She said she was willing to tell everything she knew about the Nagal case. She said she could establish where she was at the time of the alleged murder of the decorator.

On the evening Nagal disappeared, the Rewis woman said, she saw him at a house in Brunswick where she was staying. She said she left later for Jacksonville and was at a hotel there. She claimed she had made no effort to avoid arrest by the police and that if she had so wished she could have easily escaped being taken into custody.

The Rowe woman had nothing to say when arrested.

Ruth Cross, who was arrested in Brunswick, told officers at the time that she did not take a taxi ride with Nagal on the day he disappeared. Officers charged that she was in the cab with the decorator the last time he was seen alive.

The Cross woman said she formerly lived in El Paso, Texas, and was now a resident of Brunswick and the wife of a prawn fisherman. She related spending Christmas with her mother at Augusta and going to Florida during the shrimp fishing there in 1929. She firmly declared her innocence of any connection with the Nagal case and declared she did not fear trial.

The death of Nagal came to light when his brother at Washington received a wire from Brunswick to the effect that Frank Nagal was dead and that his body was en route to Washington. The body never reached the national capital and an investigation was started. The body was found here more than a year later.

GRIFFIN, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Quimby Melton, editor of the Griffin News, has selected 59 men who "rule" Georgia. The list includes bankers, newspapermen, manufacturers, teachers, preachers and others prominent in the state.

Mr. Melton conducts a daily front page column "Good Evening," in which he discusses local and state affairs. It is in this column that he nominates the 59 "rulers." Mr. Melton's selections came as the result of the selection of 59 "rulers" of the United States by former Ambassador Gerard.

Then too, all Georgia women are 'rulers' and we men folk like to be 'ruled' by them."

The editor has also eliminated any Spalding county citizens. He said, "to pick 'rulers' in our county is getting too close to home. We like to feel here that all our people are 'equal at the polls' when it comes to voting. You know that is what we heard from the day we first studied political science in high school."

Holders of Public Office Omitted.

No holders of public office are listed. "For," Mr. Melton said, "no less an authority than the former ambassador tells us that the 'rulers' do not hold office but are the 'power behind the throne.'"

GERMAN AVIATORS REACH LABRADOR

Surprise Flight to North America Proves Highly Successful.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 23.—(AP)—The crew of the German flying boat bound from Europe to North America was believed tonight to have landed safely in Cartwright Bay, Labrador.

The Hudson Bay steamer Baynain received a radio message from the craft at 1:18 p. m. (E. S. T.) saying it was almost to Cartwright and expected to land in ten minutes.

The German crew then reported that the antenna of its radio outfit was being hauled in and that it would not communicate further with the steamer.

Since there is no radio connection with Cartwright this was the last available news of the plane on its Greenland-Labrador hop, on which it took off from Ivigtut, Greenland, this morning. The weather was fine and clear.

Cartwright is 500 statute miles north of St. John's and 1,200 miles from New York by air line.

Cartwright is a spacious landlocked bay 25 miles west of Grady Island, which lies off the Labrador coast.

Captain Wolfegang Von Gronau, chief pilot, is an instructor in the German Government Flying school and a flier of long experience. He was forced down in Scotland on an attempted flight from Germany to the United States in 1928. In 1929 he appeared unheralded at Reykjavik from Sylt Island, a flight of 1,000 miles, and said that he would continue to the United States. He was recalled by the German government.

CUT IN ACREAGE OF COTTON URGED

Georgia and Alabama Farmers Pass Resolutions at Byromville.

BY H. R. ROMANS,
Editor, Southern Cultivator.

BYROMVILLE, Ga., Aug. 23.—A southwide movement to enlist cotton farmers in a plan to reduce the 1931 cotton acreage to one-half of that of 1930, as a means to increase the price of the staple this season, as well as in years to come, was favored by a gathering of 500 farmers, merchants, bankers and agricultural workers, held in a grove near here today.

The resolution sponsoring the plan was offered by Joseph O. Thompson, of Tuskegee, Ala., a "plain dirt" farmer, who prefaced his plan by stressing the necessity of drastic action by the farmers of the south, and the resolution was adopted with only one dissenting vote.

Colonel Harvie Jordan, manager of the better farming campaign, under whose direction the 150-acre demonstration is being conducted, opened the meeting with a short talk on the intensive culture of cotton, and then introduced Eugene Talmadge, commissioner of agriculture, who delivered a short address on the problems that beset the farmer.

Commissioner Talmadge stressed the necessity of soil building by the planting of Austrian peas and hairy vetch to put humus and nitrogen into the soil and asserted that the farmer who ignored this essential of good practice and depended entirely upon fertilizer would ultimately go broke.

Assails Tariff.

He assailed the tariff as one of the great burdens of the farmer and showed how a protection rate on jute would make a market for 3,000,000 bales of cotton. He declared that the present low price of cotton afforded the people of the south an opportunity to make money by buying cotton and holding it off the market until the price advanced.

S. B. Byrom explained the technical methods used in the big demonstration.

The primary object of the meeting was to afford farmers, bankers and businessmen generally to inspect success obtained in the first attempt ever made in the south to apply the same intensive methods of culture of cotton on a 150-acre demonstration that have been applied by many farmers to two to five-acre plots, the idea being to show that by the use of the intensive system of culture the majority of cotton farmers can increase their yield from around one-third of a bale per acre to nearly one bale per acre at less cost per pound than under the old methods of culture.

In preparation of the soil for this big demonstration the 150 acres were broken deeply with tractor-operated plows, harrowed with discs to a fine tilth and bedded into rows three and one-half feet wide. It was planted April 2-3 with Pedigreed Wilson Improved 1 1-16-inch staple seed, and in three different applications received

PLAN FOR HOUSING PRISONERS SCORED AS HELP TO PLOTS

Rewards of $950 Each Posted for Recapture and $200 Each for Those Convicted of Conspiracy.

LOWRY IS GRILLED ON TOWER SYSTEM

Sheriff Reiterates Defense of Staff; Hope of Information Leading to Recapture Vanishes.

A rigorous "shake-up" in the present jail forces under Sheriff J. I. Lowry was demanded by members of the Fulton county commission Saturday in its inquiry into the escape Thursday night of Fred Fair and Sam F. Aiken, two doomed murderers, recapture of whom late Saturday seemed increasingly less probable.

At the same time it became apparent in county official quarters that, baffled by the sensational getaway, authorities now have turned the scope of the investigation into channels seeking the identity and arrest of persons believed to have co-operated with the criminals in their long-laid plans.

Incidental developments in the affair broke with rapid sequence as the second day passed since the slayers sawed their way out of their first-floor cells in the Fulton tower. Rewards were posted, totaling $950 each for their recapture, the county commissioners leading the way with offers of $500 each. Sheriff Lowry himself putting up $250 each while Governor Hardman, after considering the request for rewards overnight, agreed to place $200 apiece on the heads of the desperadoes.

Indicative of the mounting conviction that the daring escape was the outgrowth of a widespread conspiracy to liberate the condemned men was the prompt action of the commissioners—even before considering the reward proposed for their recapture—in setting aside automatically rewards of $200 for every person found guilty of aiding in the escapes.

Every faint hope for information leading to the discovery of the whereabouts of Fair and Aiken apparently had vanished from those in charge of the sheriff's search for the fugitives Saturday. A rumored arrest in Gulfport, Miss., developed into nothing more than a mere customary inquiry by police officials of that city for descriptions of the hunted men, based simply on their requirements requisite to joining in the search.

Meantime Sheriff Lowry himself declared that he had "nothing to say" when asked for new information resulting from the expedition of deputies sent into Alabama and New Orleans shortly after discovery of the jail break. Other members of his office declared they had "heard nothing" from any of the three assistants, Deputy Robert Holland, chief jailer, having gone to the Louisiana port city, while two others had motored Friday to Birmingham and points in Alabama.

Assistant Solicitor-General Stephens announced Saturday night that he would go before the supreme court Monday with a plea that Fair's application for a rehearing be dismissed.

"By his escape Fair has forfeited all rights for a rehearing on his application for a new trial unless he surrenders himself to the sheriff at once," Mr. Stephens said. "Under the law the supreme court can give him a short time in which to present himself, otherwise he will lose his standing in the courts."

Mr. Stephens said he would prepare his motion today and have it ready for filing with the high court Monday afternoon.

Lowry Questioned Closely.

Sheriff Lowry appeared before the board of county commissioners at its inquiry Saturday morning. He was closely questioned by members and reiterated his declaration that he did not believe that any of his staff at the tower had been guilty of neglect of duty or of rendering aid to the plotters.

In sharp contrast, however, was the assertion made by Commissioner Walter Hendrix, who told the board that he and Commissioner Ed Inman had visited the scene of the jail break and that, in his opinion, the escape "certainly showed a great deal of negligence or criminal co-operation."

It was Commissioner Walter B. Stewart who proposed a definite "shake-up" in the personnel at the jail. He was joined in his proposal by Mr. Hendrix, who further suggested that the system prevailing at the tower, in so far as it concerns the handling of prisoners, also should undergo a change.

"Those prisoners," Mr. Hendrix said, "should also be 'shaken up' every once in a while—changed around from cell block to other cell blocks. This thing couldn't happen so easily then."

"They (Fair and Aiken) could not have escaped at all," Mr. Inman interjected, 'if they had been properly looked after."

Testifying as to his information concerning the successful dash for freedom, Sheriff Lowry was closely interrogated by Commissioner Inman.

"What time did they escape?" he asked the sheriff.

"It was about 9 o'clock," Mr. Lowry replied.

"And when was their escape discovered?"

"About 11 o'clock."

"How often do you have inspection down at the jail?" Mr. Inman pursued the examination.

Sheriff Lowry replied that the rounds are made every hour.

"Gazaway (another prisoner) told Mr. Hendrix and myself," Mr. Inman stated, "that Fair and Aiken got out at about 6:30 Thursday evening. How about that?"

"I wouldn't believe that man on oath," Sheriff Lowry said.

Commissioner Inman termed as "ridiculous" the method employed at the tower of maintaining the most important or more dangerous type of prisoners on the first floor. Sheriff Lowry declared that this had been the practice "because there is always somebody on the ground floor, and in that way we can keep an eye on them."

The interrogator observed that he considered such a custom a "serious mistake."

Custom Termed "Mistake."

"Condemned murderers," he told the sheriff, "should be kept on the top floor, where it would discourage such plots and make more difficult their being carried out."

Some discussion ensued from the proposal for offering rewards. The first mention of reward to be made before the inquiry was that providing sums for the arrest and conviction of every person who had a part in the conspiracy to gain freedom for the pair, this being disposed of when it was agreed to post sums of $200 each for the conviction of anyone connected with the plot.

The matter of offering $500 rewards for the return of the fugitives drew the question of legal right. County Attorney Charles Shelton gave it as his opinion that, although there is no law providing for such rewards, the county commissioners "would have as much right to offer a reward for the recapture of the escaped men as for the persons convicted of aiding them." On this point Mr. Inman opposed offering of a bounty for the escaped men, declaring that, as he saw it, the matter rested solely with the sheriff and the state.

Salary System Assailed.

At this juncture Mr. Stewart assailed the salary system of the sheriff's office, which, he declared, should be abolished.

"Under the salary system," he pointed out, "it appears that the county commissioners are responsible for fee officers, and not at all responsible for their conduct in office."

One certainty loomed late Saturday afternoon—that virtually every person who has visited Fair or Aiken at the jail personally since their incarceration will be sought by the solicitor-general's office for questioning, in an effort to identify all persons who might have had a part in the transfer of hacksaws and other contraband articles, or who otherwise might have aided the couple in their astounding escape. While officials of the solicitor's office would make no direct statement for publication, it was intimated that the inquiry from that angle "has n't fully begun yet."

Names of persons questioned in that connection, and the nature of interrogations or information gleaned from such were being carefully guarded by Assistant Solicitor Ed A. Stephens and John A. Hudson, in charge during John A. Boykin's vacation absence. Neither Mr. Stephens nor Mr. Hudson would intimate who is to be subpoenaed during the inquiry, and aside from denying that thus far they have come upon a direct "lead," neither would discuss the trend of the prosecution's probe.

Elaborate Conspiracy Seen.

It was learned, however, that the solicitor's office is convinced that an elaborate conspiracy had been in the making for many weeks prior to the actual escape; that those in charge during Mr. Boykin's leave are even entertaining the theory that plans laid by co-conspirators may even have included the airplane as a medium of filght for the two. it was pointed out that both men "had records as bootleggers" and that the probability existed that they may have had strong friends in Tampa, Jacksonville, Detroit, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Chicago. One theory expressed was that one or more automobiles were used in the getaway; that the men were speedily taken to some not distant airport and boarded a plane as passengers for a far-away destination.

Although the solicitor's assistants did not attach major importance to the letter purported to have been written by Aiken a short time before his escape and mailed to John W. Thomas, his attorney, no one would advance a reason for discrediting it as a "ruse to divert attention." The letter itself, given publicity in The Constitution Saturday morning, was written in the characteristic style of the doomed wife-slayer, and it was recalled by several who had known him since the murder of his wife and a neighbor that Aiken always had been prone to write out notes and letters of explanations. The note disclosed that Aiken was escaping with Fair as a last resort to avert the death sentence imposed on him recently for the last time, and indicated that he eventually intended to prove his innocence.

Hundreds of circulars bearing photographs and Bertillon measurements of Aiken and Fair were being disseminated throughout the southeast Saturday. Many others will be mailed to all important American cities in the hope of assisting in the search for the missing slayers.

Despite all these preparations and technicalities, however, one fact alone remained clear as the second day passed since the history-making escape—the sheriff's office has received no information which might be used as a clew to the whereabouts of Fair and Aiken, and any theory is as valuable to the officials as any other might be.

Endangers Own Life To Save Sum of $50

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Morris Miller, 46, dove out a second-story window and crashed through a glass-studded sidewalk into a basement tonight—but he saved his $50.

Confronted by two armed holdup men, Miller, the proprietor of a Brooklyn suit renting store, tussled with them in vain and then made his leap for fortune. Police extricated him and found he had two broken ribs and lacerations. The bandits fled, leaving behind them a pistol. It was made of glass.

Church Heads Order Aimee on Long Rest

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Aimee Semple McPherson, variously reported suffering from a nervous breakdown, and from a "face lifting" operation, today was ordered by directors of Angelus Temple, which she founded, to take a few weeks' rest.

Announcement that she would not immediately return to her pastorate followed the evangelist's declaration that she would preach a sermon tomorrow.

The attending physician, who said Mrs. McPherson was under medical care for a nervous condition, also reported he would not permit her to enter the pulpit.

CUT IN ACREAGE OF COTTON URGED

an average of 686 pounds of fertilizer per acre.

Following instructions of Colonel Harvie Jordan, managing director of the better farming campaign, who induced Mr. Byrom to put on the demonstration, boll weevil control was amply provided for and under system of intensive culture each acre was plowed over and thoroughly cultivated at least once a week, as the weather permitted. The cotton is opening rapidly and in one section over one-half a bale per acre has already been picked on the 100-acre tract. The best estimaters of this section figure it will yield 125 bales, while the entire tract will yield 175 bales.

Farmers To Lose.

A loss to Georgia farmers of from 30 to 40 million dollars this year on their cotton crop at prevailing prices was predicted by Mr. Westbrook.

Speaking on an inspection of a 100-acre test field of fine cotton on the farm of S. D. Byrom, here, Mr. Westbrook said that the average cost of producing cotton in Georgia this season is 16 cents per pound. "When the spot price goes below that figure it means a net loss to the average grower," he said.

"If this test field is an example of what can be done with cotton on Georgia land, the yield will be over 90 bales, or practically a bale to the acre. The cost per pound, according to accurate records, is 10 cents. That means a profit of about $15 per acre, even at the present low price, Mr. Westbrook said.

He said the field here was not unusually fertile, but that the soil had been carefully prepared, well fertilized, frequently cultivated, side-dressed and controlled against weevil. "All Georgia farmers can do likewise and reduce cotton production costs from 16 to 10 cents a pound."

An optimistic note on the condition of Georgia farmers as compared to those in other sections was sounded by J. Phil Campbell, director of agricutural extension work in the state, who recently returned from a drouth conference. He said that "Georgia has by far the best crops this year of any state east of the Rocky mountains. We may lose a large amount on the cotton crop but even so, Georgia farmers are in far better condition than those of other states."

He said Georgia farmers should "live at home" and expressed delight that more hay and corn was planted this year, while no increase was made in cotton acreage. He announced that on September 1 two more specialists, one in co-operative marketing and the other in crop estimating, and eight farm agents and eight home demonstration agents, would be added in Georgia.

Other speakers on the program were L. H. Nelson, county agricultural agent; J. N. Hargrove, banker of Vienna, and Martin Amorous, of Marietta.

Finding of Bodies of Three Explorers Adds New Volume to Lore of Arctic

Thirty-three years after August Andree (top, right), Swedish balloonist, disappeared into the Arctic when he set out from Danes island (map) to cross the pole in a balloon, his body, and that of a companion, were found on White island. Andree's balloon is shown (lower right) just after it was launched.

BY OLAF MYRE.
United News Staff Correspondent.

OSLO, Norway, Aug. 23.—A thrilling epic of the history of polar exploration and man's struggle to conquer the air is being woven from the evidence brought back from the far north, where the remains of Andree's polar expedition have been found frozen in the ice.

The full tale awaits the return and perusal of Andree's log and diary, which were found, but the evidence already brought back from the region of the north pole gives a definite clue to the amazing adventure of Andree and his two companions.

Missed Goal 500 Miles.

The evidence shows that the balloon, the Eagle, after setting out from Spitzbergen, on July 11, 1897, drifted for hundreds of miles to the north and east, reaching a point perhaps 500 miles or less from the pole.

It appeared certain that the balloon did not land on White Island, between Spitzbergen and Franz Joseph Land, where the bodies were found, but that the occupants landed safely on the ice fields north of there and made a laborious attempt to work their way back south towards civilization.

Andree's diary and the log were frozen solid when found and it was deemed inadvisable to attempt to open them for fear of destroying the pages, but one leaf at the end of the log was visible. It contained a report from the balloon at 83 degrees north, 33 east, proving that the Eagle had gone at least within seven degrees of the pole.

Lived Months in Arctic.

The position was north of White Island. The worn shoes of the party, and the wear on their weapons and utensils indicated that they had lived perhaps for months, struggling to get south afoot, by sled and canvas boat.

No trace of the balloon or of a tent was found on White Island by Dr. Gunnar Horn, of the official Norwegian governmental expedition aboard the steamer Brattvaag, which discovered the bodies.

The three had found a sheltered place under a cliff near the shore of the island, and, exhausted by their struggles, apparently made a last stand for life there. The equipment found included two sledges, a canvas boat, harpoon, three rifles, a primus stove and various instruments. No food was found, except the carcass of a polar bear, which Andree apparently had shot. The balloon was equipped with nearly six months provisions and plentiful supplies, so that the little party may have survived for several months.

Leader Lived Longest.

The body of the leader, Salomon August Andree, was found fully clothed, with his diary in his pocket. One of his companions, either Nils Strindborg, or Knut H. F. Farenkel, lay near by. The other sought shelter in the boat and was frozen in it. The three guns, fish hooks, cooking utensils, the oil stove and navigating instruments were found near the bodies.

Only an exceptionally mild turn of weather and heavy rain led to the discovery of the bodies, which were buried under ice and preserved almost as they died.

Horn said Andree certainly had lived longer than his companions and had remained in camp alongside their bodies, vainly awaiting rescue. Two days digging was necessary to recover the bodies from the ice.

The corpses were put in a wood case, packed in ice, and taken aboard the Brattvaag for the return to Norway.

BODY OF EXPLORER TO BE RETURNED HOME.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The Swedish government has decided to bring the body of Salomon-Auguste Andree, famous explorer and balloonist, back to his native land aboard a Swedish battleship.

The ship will meet the sealing vessel Brattvaag, which is carrying the body, at some convenient point and make the transfer. Solemn ceremonies will mark the bringing of the body to Sweden and its interment.

FIVE HAVE TRIED BY AERIAL ROUTE.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(AP)—There have been five important attempts to reach the north pole by the aerial route since Captain Roald Amundsen made his epochal flight on June 14, 1925.

Amundsen on that occasion went north of Greenland to latitude 87.44, the closest approach to the pole ever made by any explorer without completely achieving success.

The Amundsen expedition was followed on May 9, 1926, by that of Lieutenant Commander Byrd, who flew from Spitzbergen to the pole and back.

The next conquest of the pole by air was achieved by the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile expedition in a dirigible, the Norge, which crossed the pole May 12, 1926.

Captain Sir George H. Wilkins attempted to fly over the world's axis from Point Barrow to Spitzbergen April 15, 1928. He reached north latitude 85 but failed of the ultimate aim of his flight.

General Umberto Nobile, in the dirigible Italia flew across the pole on May 23, 1928, and was wrecked and stranded in the arctic while on his return with the loss of some of his crew whose fate remains unknown.

Captain Amundsen and Rene Gilbaud made a flight from Tromsoe in a seaplane on June 18, 1928, in an effort to rescue Nobile. They were swallowed up in the arctic and never returned.

ONLY FOUR RELATIVES ARE NOW ALIVE.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Only four relatives of members of the ill fated Andree polar expedition, whose bodies and camp have been discovered on White Island, can be found alive today.

The mother of Salomon-Auguste Andree died shortly before the expedition set out. His brother died at Gotenburg a few years ago.

Two unmarried sisters of Knut Frankel still live near Stockholm, but his younger brother, who joined one of the relief expeditions seeking the party, is now dead.

Two brothers of Nils Strindberg are also alive. One is curator of a Stockholm art collection, and the other is an architect in America.

Strindberg, before starting on the expedition, had become engaged to Anna Chartier, in the autumn of 1896. But so far as can be ascertained she is not alive today, and it cannot be learned whether she ever married any one else.

BROTHER OF EXPLORER LIVES AT PORTSMOUTH.

PORTSMOUTH, Ohio, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Nils Strindberg, who accompanied August Andree, Swedish balloonist, on his ill-fated dash to the north pole 31 years ago, was a brother of Erik Strindberg, Portsmouth architect. Strindberg informed his brother at the time of the take-off for the trip, that he was apprehensive of the results of the adventure, as there was not sufficient varnish for covering the balloon.

AMERICAN FOUND TRACE OF BALLOON.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—A new account of the take-off of Salomon-August Andree, on his ill-fated balloon trip 33 years ago into the far north—from whence his body now is returning—was told tonight by Dr. James Howard Gore, of the National Geographic Society.

Dr. Gore, himself a veteran of the north and one time chairman of the Georgraphic Society committee which investigated and disclaimed Dr. Frederick Cook's story of reaching the north pole, exhibited a replica of the old Swedish Norwegian flag painted by Andree on his balloon hangar. He had camped at the site a year after Andree began his flight.

A sudden gust of wind just as the balloon left the ground, rather than a fouling of its drag lines foredoomed the flight to failure, Dr. Gore believes.

The takeoff, he said, was made from a narrow shelf of rock, 50 feet from the sea, and at the base of a towering mound. A tricky down-current of air suddenly sent the bag careening toward the sea just at the wrong moment, he explained, and upset carefully laid plans.

MEMENTOES HOUSED IN KANSAS MUSEUM.

BALDWIN, Kans., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Mementoes of the ill-fated Arctic balloon flight of S. August Andree, 33 years ago are housed in the Baker University museum here, the gift of Capt. Evelyn Briggs Baldwin, who arrived in Spitzbergen 48 hours too late to join the Andree party.

Captain Briggs, meteorologist of the second Perry expedition from 1893 to 1894, now is stationed in Washington doing research work in the historical division of the navy department. Three years after he returned from the north with the Perry party Captain Briggs hurried to join Andree, but was unsuccessful.

Finding he was too late in reaching Dane island, the starting place, Captain Baldwin gathered souvenirs of the flight. Later he brought them to the United States and presented the collection to Baker University.

141 OTHER MEN ARE MISSING IN NORTH.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(AP)—One riddle of the silent north has been solved with the finding of the bodies of Salomon Auguste Andree and his two companions, who flew off toward the north pole in a balloon 33 years ago. But the arctic still holds the fates and the bodies of 141 other men who, like Andree and his crew, never came back.

Twelve of them vanished two years ago this summer, six in the bag of General Umberto Nobile's dirigible "Italia," as it drifted away after the crash on the polar ice cap north of North East Land—not so very far, as arctic distances go, from the place where Andree's body was found—and six more in a French seaplane in which Captain Raold Amundsen set out from Norway to rescue Nobile.

The other 129 perished more than 80 years ago in the vicinity of Baffin island, off the northern coast of Canada, with Sir John Franklin, a British explorer as noted in his day as Amundsen was later.

In two ships, the "Erebus" and the "Terror," Sir John and his crew set out on May 19, 1845, with three years' supplies, to find a northwest passage to the Pacific. A few weeks later they sailed from Baffin bay into Lancaster sound. Fourteen years passed before any hint of their fate was brought back and the story was never completed.

In August, 1851, a British searching party found on Beechey island, across Baffin bay from Greenland and about 3,000 miles west of those later tragedies, traces of what later proved to have been the winter camp of Sir John Franklin and his party in 1845-1846.

Eight more years passed, and in the spring of 1859 a party sent out by Sir John's widow found at Point Victory, on King William island, about 300 miles southwest of Beechey island and right off the coast of Canada, a few skeletons and some papers tucked away in a cairn.

Those papers told the history of the expedition to April 25, 1848. The "Erebus" and the "Terror," ice-beset since September 12, 1846, had been abandoned as they broke up. Sir John was dead, and so were nine of his officers and 15 of his men. The rest of the party—104 officers and men—was about to set out on foot, weak from starvation and exposure, for civilization.

PHOEBE OMLIE LEADS "LADYBIRDS" TO CITY

through a number of loops. The number of her ship is 19.

Her record of elapsed time since leaving Washington is as follows: 1:00:37; 1:06:27; 3:39:12, and 1:57:35, making a total of 7:43:51.

Miss Nancy Hopkins, of Garden City, Long Island, flying a Kitty Hawk, numbered 61, was also beset with trials and tribulations. She knew that she was near Atlanta by all rights, but still Atlanta failed to show itself. She saw a railroad track, a filling station and a big field—and down into the field she set her ship. "How far is it to Atlanta?" she called to a startled native. He gasped out, "twenty-four miles—er—lady," dragging out the last word with some hesitancy.

With a wave of her hand and a blithe "Okey" she took off from the field and landed at Candler field in fourth place at 4:23:43 with an elapsed time of 2:41:43. She laughingly denied that she had gotten gasoline at the filling station by the railroad. Her time from Washington reads: 0:59.42; 2:26:30; 2:01:25 and 2:41:43. She was the second pilot to take off from Columbia.

The fifth and last entry in the Dixie derby to arrive in Atlanta Saturday afternoon was Mrs. Charity Langdon, of Norfolk, Va., who arrived at 4:36:55 with an elapsed time from Columbia of 3:02:55. She was the fourth in the take-off at Columbia and was piloting an Avian, numbered 81. Her time log from Washington after arrival here was: 1:09:38; 1:35:57; 2:24:40 and 3:02:55, making a total of 8:14:10.

Miss Vera Dawn Walker, of Los Angeles, the sixth pilot in the derby, did not arrive at Candler field during Saturday afternoon. She left Raleigh Saturday morning but was forced down before reaching Columbia by a stoppage of her gas line. It was later reported that she had left Columbia at 4:33:57.

Mrs. Vera Dawn Walker, of Los Angeles, who flew out of Raleigh in second place, ran into difficulties twice during the day and rolled up many hours which placed her far behind the leader. Forced down en route to the noon stop at Columbia, she lost an hour and a half before completing that hop, and darkness overtook her before she reached Atlanta. Tonight she stayed in Athens, intending to come here early today for the flight to Birmingham and Memphis.

She was piloting a ship numbered 18 and her time at the last report was 0:42:45 and 0:59:15.

Three other ships, a Waco, Curtiss Robin and a Fairchild KR-34, arrived at the field Saturday. They are commercial ships sent out by their builders to accompany the women fliers, but they have no actual part in the race.

The women fliers were greeted at the field by Henderson Hallman, Gregory Bowden and B. S. Barker, while a special cordon of police kept the enthusiastic crowds within safety limits marked with chains. The pilots were then welcomed by a ladies' committee who saw to their comfort and transportation to the Biltmore hotel, where all spent Saturday night preparatory for taking off at 10 o'clock this morning for Birmingham and thence to Memphis and Chicago.

This committee, headed by Mrs. C. H. Dolan, was composed of Mrs. George Schealy, Mrs. Doug Davis, Mrs. Johnnie Gill, Mrs. William Vandike, and Mrs. Olin Hunt. C. H. Dolan, of Eastern Air Transport, Inc., was in charge of arrangements at the field and acted as referee. He was assisted by Hubert Duckworth, of the Curtiss-Wright Flying Service, in the capacity of starter and timer. All ships were placed in the army hangar at the field with the exception of that of Mrs. Bowman, who requested that it be sent to the hangar of Beeler Blevins.

At 7:30 Saturday night the fliers were entertained at dinner on the terrace of the Biltmore hotel by the Aero Club of Atlanta. The affair ended early as all of the pilots were anxious to get rest for today's grind.

The derby, which is the first women's event to visit Atlanta, is sponsored by the National Air Races for $4,000 in cash prizes. It is one of five heading into Chicago where the aviation show opened Saturday.

Young Air Speeder Lands at Columbus

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Eddie Schneider, 18-year-old Jersey City aviator, who is attempting to establish a new west-to-east transcontinental air record, put his plane down at Port Columbus here this afternoon at 3:55 p. m., eastern standard time. He hopped off from Wichita, Kan., at 6:50 a. m., central standard time, this morning.

Schneider required 7 hours 45 minutes for the trip from Wichita to Port Columbus, a distance of about 800 miles.

His total elapsed time to this city is 21 hours 35 minutes. He is attempting to shatter the junior record of 28 hours 55 minutes from the Pacific to the Atlantic, made by the late Frank Goldsborough. The young flyer established a new junior east-to-west transcontinental mark last week.

Kermit Roosevelt Now Lumber Baron

NEW YORK Aug. 23.—(AP)—Friends of Kermit Roosevelt, explorer, steamship executive and son of the late president, learned today that he had entered the lumber business.

Mr. Roosevelt is chairman of the board of directors of the Deep Bay Lumber Company, a $300,000 private corporation formed to cut and ship unfinished timber from the Panama coast to Baltimore.

AUTO BANDIT TRIO GET $43 IN HOLDUP

Holcombe's Slayer Believed Active as Robbers Attack Nabors.

J. M. Nabors, of 196 Garnett street, accredited with being the cause of the arrest, conviction and eventual electrocution of three negro holdup men here three years ago, was again on the job Saturday night, seeking three white men, answering the description, according to police of the trio who shot and killed W. R. Holcombe last week. The three held Nabors up on Trinity avenue between Whitehall and Pryor streets early Saturday night.

Nabors was walking along the street when a car drew to the curb, and two men with pistols in their hands alighted. They relieved him of $43 in cash, and a third man in a car, drove them rapidly away. Nabors reported the incident to police and began a search for them "on his own hook."

Three years ago, while working in a grocery store on Sylvan avenue, three negro bandits held him up one Saturday night and robbed him of $165. He was shot in the arm and leg by one of the negroes when he resisted.

The next day, while walking on Butler street near Fulton tower, the wounded man recognized one of the negroes and held him until police could be summoned. The negro, Will Gillam, revealed the names of the other two. It was then discovered the trio had slain an aged negro in another robbery the week before. All died in the electric chair.

Police stated Saturday night that the trio of white men now being sought answer the description of the Holcombe slayers, who, following the same methods, killed the grocery store manager a week ago Saturday night.

B. F. Rosenburg, operator of a grocery market at 419 Conally street, was held up by a lone negro bandit who entered his store late Saturday night and at the point of a pistol took $96 in cash. Rosenburg's wife and a woman customer were in the store at the time and an accurate description of the negro was obtained by police.

Chicago Editor Files Damage Suit

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Counsel for Robert M. Lee, city editor of the Chicago Tribune, today filed the declaration in Lee's $250,000 damage suit against the Illinois Publishing Co., publishers of the Chicago Herald and Examiner.

The suit is based on an article in the Herald and Examiner July 22, implying, the declaration alleges, that Mr. Lee knew of racketeering activities carried on by Alfred J. Lingle, slain reporter.

The suit also alleges that, prior to July 22, the Herald and Examiner printed stories which while they did not directly and specifically so charge, insinuated that Mr. Lee had knowledge of purported criminal activities of Lingle and was withholding this knowledge from authorities and trying to prevent some of Lingle's activities from being made public.

England May Honor George Washington

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The George Washington bicentennial in 1932 may be celebrated in England, Washington's fatherland before it was his enemy.

That was the report of Representative Sol Bloom, of New York, associate director of the centennial commission, on his return from Europe where he urged celebrations among American residents abroad.

"It may seem odd that anyone should have had the temerity to suggest honoring George Washington in England, but I found only the friendliest and most sympathetic attitude among the English people toward this project," he said today.

Representative Bloom also said there was great enthusiasm for the project in France.

REVOLUTION IN PERU REPORTED WORSE

LIMA, Peru, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Reports were current today that the revolutionary movement in the department of Arequipa had spread to the departments of Puno and Cuzco, but these could not be verified officially.

The government organ, La Prensa, said, however, that both departments, which are north of Arequipa, were quiet and had not been disturbed in the least.

Military garrisons were on the side of the government, added the paper, and lines of communication with the remainder of the republic are standing.

The revolt in Arequipa, which is the third city of Peru, was led by Lieutenant Colonel Sanchez Cerro. His troops arrested Federico Fernandini, prefect of the department, and Brigadier General Leopoldo Arias, chief of the Arequipa military division, but there was no bloodshed.

A government communique issued here said that the movement was based on a forged army ordinance saying that the government had decided to discharge some officers and soldiers and to cut the salaries of others. It added that necessary steps had been taken to restore order in the province.

One report had it that these steps involved the sending of a fleet to Mollendo, a port near Arequipa, and moving aircraft upon the city. The government also closed Hollendo, which is the terminus of a railroad running through Arequipa, to both national and foreign commercial vessels, and closed Arequipa to commercial aircraft.

After word of the revolt was received here yesterday, members of the senate and the chamber of deputies discontinued sessions to call upon President Augusto B. Leguia, supposedly to express their loyalty. High army officers also called upon him.

The president took over the Peruvian government by a coup d'etat in 1919 and established a strong administration. He was reinaugurated in both 1924 and 1929, to hold office until 1935.

Salvation Army Wants Moving Day Discards

All manner of "moving day" household discards, from ice cream freezers to radios and from old silk sox to older opera hats, drifted into the Salvation Army social service center during the last week in response to its appeal for more material which can be sold to maintain its service for unemployed men.

Ensign Hugo Bloomberg, officer in charge, reported that a market had been found for all old newspapers and rags, although at substantially lower prices than were received last year, and that paper as well as other waste material would be collected on phone call to Jackson 2224.

The center, which includes the industrial home for rehabilitation of men who are "down but not out," has incurred a deficit of approximately $3,000 already this year because lower prices for waste material made it impossible to meet all demands for service out of current income. An effort is being made to reduce this deficit with collections during the moving season.

The center is supported entirely by reclaiming old clothing, old furniture and the like, all cash contributions going to the relief department for cases of distress involving women and children.

Gerard's List Is Grotesque Negation of Fact--Sullivan

Noted Reporter Shows Fallacy in Assumption. Says Great Majority Opposed Hoover and Prohibition.

BY MARK SULLIVAN.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—The allegation by former Ambassador James W. Gerard that 64 men named by him, chiefly industrial leaders, "rule the United States," is a grotesque negation of fact. . . . Gerard says of these men "they are too busy to hold political office, but they determine who shall hold such office."

This statement is subject to concrete test. In the national government, from president to congress, including important appointive offices, there are in all about 600 offices. Among the whole 600 office-holders, there is just one, a senator, of whom it might possibly be said that his presence in office was "determined" in part by a man on Mr. Gerard's list. The one man on the list who perhaps exercised this much power is a chain newspaper publisher.

Majority Against Hoover.

Of the 64 men listed by Mr. Gerard, a large majority were opposed to the nomination of Mr. Hoover in the republican party. Nevertheless Mr. Hoover was nominated and was elected. In the 1928 election a large majority of the men on this list were opposed to Governor Smith, yet Governor Smith got 15,000,000 votes. The case of Governor Smith illustrates vividly the fallacy of Mr. Gerard's list. Governor Smith is not on the list, yet there are fully 10,000,000 votes in America whose attitude in politics is determined by the ideas Governor Smith originates or espouses, or by his personality. Calvin Coolidge is not on Mr. Gerard's list, but Mr. Coolidge, whenever he chooses, can influence the selection of men for public office to a far greater degree than any of the men on Mr. Gerard's list.

On Mr. Gerard's list, 47 are heads of corporations or bankers. Among these, about eight can be recognized as having had or attempted to have an important part in the republican nomination for president in 1928. Of the eight, six were energetically opposed to the nomination of Mr. Hoover. One man on the list, William H. Crocker, favored Mr. Hoover because he is a Californian. Even Mr. Mellon, the only man in political life who is on Mr. Gerard's list, was neutral about the nomination of Mr. Hoover until there was a clear demonstration of Pennsylvania public opinion in Mr. Hoover's favor.

Don't Rule Supreme Bench.

Another public office that has real power in "ruling the United States," to adopt Mr. Gerard's phrase, is justice of the supreme court. There are nine justices, and if any one is looking for a superlative that is justified, he may say that these nine compose perhaps the most powerful group among the forces that really determine the destiny of the country. I have had first-hand information of the circumstances attending the appointment of eight justices, and dependable second-hand information about the ninth. No one of the men on Mr. Gerald's list was consulted about the appointment of any justice now on the supreme court. No man on the list knew about any appointment on the supreme court until he saw it in the newspapers. The one possible exception to this statement is Mr. Mellon, who is on Mr. Gerard's list and happens to have been a member of the cabinet during the present and the two preceding presidencies.

With this possible exception, no man on the list had advance information about two justices appointed by President Hoover, nor about the one appointed by President Coolidge, nor about the two appointed by President Harding, nor about the two appointed by President Wilson, nor about the two appointed by President Roosevelt.

As to one justice, Brandeis, after President Wilson appointed him, his confirmation in the senate was opposed in an organized way by the railroads, the bankers and the corporations generally. This was the one occasion when men of the type dominating Mr. Gerard's list attempted to influence a selection to the supreme court and they failed.

Nineteen different cabinet members have been appointed by Presidents Hoover, Coolidge and Harding. No man on Mr. Gerard's list was consulted about, or had advance knowledge of any of these appointments. The only exception is Mr. Mellon, himself a cabinet member. The same statement can be made about the 15 cabinet appointments made by Woodrow Wilson.

Can't Control Senate.

Next November 35 United States senators will be elected. For these 35 seats there are 70 party candidates. Just one man on Mr. Gerard's list had a connection with the selection of just one out of these 70. President Atterbury, of the Pennsylvania railroad, is also republican national committeeman for Pennsylvania. In that capacity Mr. Atterbury undoubtedly took a part in the republican nomination for senator in that state. Mr. Atterbury was unsympathetic to the nomination of Gifford Pinchot for governor, but Mr. Pinchot was nominated. It is just possible that one other man on Mr. Gerard's list may have taken a part in the nomination of a senator from Montana. With the one exception I know about and one other possible exception as to which I know nothing, no man on Mr. Gerard's list has any more part in the selection of any one of these 70 senatorial candidates than any other voter has.

Mr. Gerard's list and his statement accompanying it gives a grotesquely false picture. The United States is governed mainly by ideas, and by the men who originate or reflect those ideas. If Mr. Gerard's 64 were as powerful as he says, the United States would today be in the League of Nations. Of the men on Gerard's list, full seven-tenths are opposed to prohibition, yet prohibition came. Every public utility man on the list, or his predecessor, was opposed to regulation. Nevertheless the idea of regulation was put forward some 20 years ago by Charles E. Hughes among others, and today there is regulation in all but one of the 48 states.

All Oppose Income Tax.

Practically every man on the list, or their predecessors in the corporate offices they hold, was opposed to the graduated income tax and the inheritance tax. Nevertheless these taxes are here. Practically every railroad man, banker and corporation head on Mr. Gerard's list, or their predecessors, was violently opposed to railroad rate regulation but Roosevelt drove it through the senate by a vote of 73 to 3.

A majority of Mr. Gerard's 64 were opposed to the tariff bill but the bill is in effect. A majority are opposed to federal aid for highways and waterways, yet federal aid has just been increased. A very large majority, almost all of the list, were strongly opposed to farm relief, yet farm relief was enacted.

Mr. Gerard added as a supplement to his original list, two leaders of organized labor, William Green and Matthew Woll. That belated addendum suggests the sheer fallacy of the whole idea behind Mr. Gerard's original list. Practically every corporation head on the original list of 62 or their predecessors in their corporate offices, opposed collective bargaining. Nevertheless, collective bargaining came and is in effect practically everywhere that organized labor cares to have it in effect.

holds its annual convention at Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, September 10-12. His subject will be "The Adjuster's Work as Seen From the Trial Lawyer's Point of View."

This association is made up of the representatives in the United States and Canada of over 200 of the leading life, accident and health insurance companies.

Extensive preparations are being made to entertain the delegates and it is expected that this will be one of the most notable conventions of the association ever held.

E. L. Earl is president of the association. He is the chief claim representative of the Sun Life of Canada. President Earl has appointed Harlan S. Don Carlos as chairman of the program committee and John A. Millener, of Rochester, N. Y., as chairman of the press committee.

Arrangements for extensive entertainment of the delegates to the convention are being made. President Earl particularly interesting himself in the program as the meeting was brought to Canada largely as a tribute to him as president of the association.

Businessmen Needed In Office, Says Pierce

The need of businessmen office-holders in the country's political organization was stressed in a statement issued Saturday by Allen W. Pierce, candidate in the congressional race of the fifth district. Reforms in education, public health and other civic affairs and the development of Muscle Shoals for utilization in behalf of the people were other highlights of the candidate's statement.

Pierce's announcement follows:

"After visiting every part of the five counties of the fifth district and talking with the people I feel confident of election to the congress September 10.

"There is a need at present and a demand for more businessmen in our political offices. The people now have an opportunity to prove to the country they are interested in a business administration by electing Allen M. Pierce to congress.

"The government is the worst managed business in the United States, according to Thomas A. Edison, and needs more businessmen in politics and political offices.

"I favor the completion and development of Muscle Shoals and its utilization for the people; federal action under a secretary of education to abolish illiteracy in the United States, and a federal bureau of health, to act, so far as the national government may, to relieve our people from the needless, useless and excessive loss from premature death and avoidable diseases.

"The fifth district should be represented by one who stands for progress, for white supremacy, for equal rights to all, for compensation and pensions for our veterans, for farm relief, for business relief, for better postal facilities and a fair share of government appropriations.

"I am offering my services to the people of the fifth district as a plain man and a humble citizen, to carry out the work which I believe the people desire. The two greatest issues in American politics are more personal libert and fewer taxes. My hat's in the ring and my heart is in the race."

Boys' High '24 Class Will Hold Reunion

Approximately 40 members of the Boys' High school class of 1924 will gather at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday night, September 2, in the Piedmont hotel, for their annual reunion, Clarke Lyndon, chairman of the committee on arrangements, announced Saturday.

Rufus Askew, of the class of 1930, will deliver the principal address. He will speak on "The True Boys' High Spirit." Several members of the faculty will be present as guests of honor.

In the absence of Clement Ford, president of the class, who has found it impossible to return from New York at this time, Benjamin Franklin Wells will preside as toastmaster. Members of the class who have moved from the city have been notified and a large number of them are expected to attend.

Members of the committee, in addition to Lyndon, are: Jack Langford, Gordon Bennett, Leal Scheff, Frank Wells, Oscar Williamson, Jr., and Alex Lindholm.

ARKANSAS GOVERNOR, LIEUTENANT IN RIFT

Cazort Fails To Act in Official Capacity During Entire Term.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 23.—(AP)—An open break between Governor Harvey Parnell and the lieutenant-governor, Lee Cazort, likely will make Cazort the state's first lieutenant-governor not accorded an opportunity to serve as governor during his term.

Cazort's two-year term will expire next January. Governor Parnell has never left the state so far during Cazort's term and only recently indicated he would not do so.

After first arranging to attend President Hoover's drouth conference of governors, Governor Parnell canceled the trip at the last moment and sent a representative.

Cazort, sensing the reason for the change in the governor's plans, immediately announced that if the governor feared to trust the office in his hands he would leave the state at the same time, thus making the president pro tempore of the senate the acting governor.

The breach between the two has reached its height with a fight over a proposed constitutional amendment to be voted upon in the November general election. The proposed amendment, sponsored by Cazort, would abolish the appointive highway commission which figured so strongly in the recent democratic primary, and substitute for it a commission of seven members, one to be elected from each congressional district, at a salary of $2,000 a year. Governor Parnell sponsored in 1929 the law which made the highway commission appointive by the governor, and he immediately reappointed the five commissioners originally named by former Governor John E. Martineau at the outset of the state's $72,000,000 road program.

Movie-Goers To See Atlanta's Industries

The first of a series of motion pictures of Atlanta industries sponsored by the industrial bureau of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, will be shown this week at Keith's Georgia theater, through the co-operation of the management. It will be shown as an addition to the regular program in a movement to "Help Atlantans Know Atlanta" by seeing some of the more important manufacturing enterprises and other industries on the screen.

This week's picture will show the widely-varied field of the Campbell Coal Company, which has grown from one mule-cart in 1884 to a business employing several hundred people, 10 yards in various parts of the city, and an enormous development in the building material field. An interesting feature is the growth of a modern residence from foundation to roof, built of Campbell materials.

The Campbell picture will be followed in future weeks by pictures of the Wofford Oil Company's industry, the Atlanta metallic factory, Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, The Atlanta Constitution and others. It is expected to show on the screen, through several months, a graphic story of the industry of the second city of the south. The films are being made by the Strickland Industrial Film Company, an Atlanta enterprise.

Druid Hills School To Open Registration

Registration of students for the fall term of the Druid Hills school will begin Thursday, September 4, and will continue daily through the rest of the week at the school building. The daily registration office hours will be from 9 a. m. until 4 p. m.

Upon payment of a tuition fee, a few high school students will be admitted from Decatur, Atlanta and other outlying districts, it was announced. The commodious new building makes it possible for school officials to admit pay pupils, a policy which was impossible heretofore, it was explained.

Methodist Board Surveys Newspaper Prohi Policies

56 Per Cent of Papers Studied Reported as Editorially Dry.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The Methodist board of temperance, prohibition and public morals today charged "great daily newspapers in some of our cities" with "making subtle but perfectly obvious appeals to religious prejudice in their warfare against the prohibition law."

This accusation was made in connection with an announcement that a survey of 2,438 of 2,213 newspapers listed in the American newspaper directory had shown 56 per cent of the periodicals studied to be dry in their editorial policy, 36 per cent wet and the remainder uncommitted.

Sixty-five per cent of the papers were reported as unbiased in the preparation of news stories dealing with prohibition and the display given such items. Twenty-six per cent were listed as publishing wet cartoons.

"Contrary to the general opinion," the board said, "the majority of the daily newspapers in the United States are dry in editorial policy and fair in their news treatment of the prohibition issue. . . .

"In general, the policy of the daily newspapers in regard to prohibition follows local sentiment, but this statement must be qualified, as there is considerable wet support in communities where the public sentiment is undoubtedly in favor of the 18th amendment.

"While the great daily newspapers of the northeastern states are usually wet, the large number of dailies which serve smaller communities in that section gives a 50 per cent break to the drys. In the southern states the dry percentage is 62, in the middle west 56, and in the far west 56, the grade being on editorial policy."

The survey was conducted by local observers, who studied the newspapers in their districts and forwarded their reports to the board here.

Asheville Papers Are Consolidated

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Announcement will be made tomorrow in the Asheville Citizen and the Asheville Times of the merger of the two newspapers under one ownership.

Charles A. Webb, president of the Asheville Citizen, will become president of the new corporation which will operate both newspapers. Don S. Elias, president of the Asheville Times, becomes vice president.

Mr. Webb and Mr. Elias announced that the merger was effected for economic reasons. There will be no radical changes, they said, in the policies or personnel of either newspaper. The Sunday Times will be merged with the Sunday Citizen. Otherwise, the papers will be independent of each other in news and editorial policies.

Census Bureau's Auto Death Figures for City Assailed

Safety Leaders Take Exception to Statement of 93 Fatalities Here Within Last Twelve Months.

Atlanta safety leaders Saturday met Washington reports of 93 deaths from automobile accidents for the year ended August 9, with statements that the figures of the census bureau are not correct in that Atlanta is charged with every death occurring here, whether the accident happened in the municipality or not.

Joseph P. McGrath, president of the Atlanta Safety Council; Charles A. Cook, secretary of the Atlanta Automobile Association, and Councilman James L. Wells, chairman of the traffic committee of council, declared that the rate is "exorbitant and unfair in that it does not restrict the deaths to those which occur within the city."

Actual Figures Shown.

According to the Washington account, 93 persons died from automobile accidents in Atlanta, but the Atlanta authorities, most interested in reducing the automobile mortality rate, declared that the entire of last year registered only 76 who died from accidents in Atlanta, and that thus far this year only 28 have succumbed to such injuries.

"Instead of Atlanta's death rate per 1,000 persons being 31.1 per cent, as listed in the governmental report, it should be about 25 per cent," McGrath declared. "Even if the 28 deaths as result of accidents in the city recorded thus far this year were added to the 76 we listed last, there would be only 104, or 11 more than the government report shows for the year period ending August 9."

"Just because those injured are rushed into Atlanta from nearby towns for treatment in Atlanta hospitals is no reason that the reports should reflect discredit on Atlanta," Cook said. "The year is more than half gone, and Atlanta has had only 28 deaths to date from accidents which occurred in the Greater Atlanta area. Atlanta has good hospitals, and persons injured are rushed here for the best possible care. This circumstance, however, should not reflect to discredit the city."

Safety Measures.

Councilman Wells declared that Atlanta is doing everything possible to reduce the death toll from automobiles.

"The effectiveness of the methods we are using in education of drivers and the sameness with which automobilists are responding to the efforts of the safety council, automobile associations and other agencies interested in cutting down the mortality rate from this cause are demonstrated by the fact that Atlanta now has less than half the number of automobile deaths this year as compared with last, despite the fact that eight months are nearly gone."

The government report showed Atlanta well to the front in the high percentage of deaths due to automobile accidents among the 78 cities in which the survey was made by the census department.

Only Erie, with a percentage of 33.7 per 1,000; Youngstown, with 31.2, and San Diego, with 32.2, were higher than the percentage for Atlanta as released.

FATALITIES TOTAL 93 FOR YEAR.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The bureau of census reports that for the 52-week period ending August 9, 1930, there were 93 deaths in Atlanta from automobile accidents, compared with 72 for the same period in 1928-1929. Deaths due to accidents in the city for the period ending August 9, 1930, were 83, compared to 55 for the preceding year.

The death rate from automobile accidents in the city per 100,000 population for the 1930 period was 31.1, compared to 21.0 in 1929.

Atlanta's death rate from automobile accidents in the city was among the highest in the 78 large cities surveyed by the bureau of census. For the period ending August 9, 1930, the death rate in some of the other cities was: Birmingham 17.8; Chicago 22.6; Cleveland 30; Erie 33.7; Memphis, 15.9; Dallas 22.2; Louisville 15.9; New Orleans 23.8; New York 19.0; San Diego 32.2; Youngstown 31.2.

DEATH OF DIVORCEE PUZZLING TO POLICE

PINE BLUFF, Ark., Aug. 23.—(AP) The question of whether Mrs. Lillian Dobbins, pretty 20-year-old divorcee and mother of three small children, committed suicide or was murdered tonight puzzled police who said they had both the written statement of her brother, Ross Deviney, 23, that he strangled her to death, and his later repudiation of that statement.

Meanwhile, report of a chemical analysis of the woman's viscera was awaited to shed possible light on the puzzling manner of her death, which occurred at her home here last night.

Deviney, who police found standing over her body, in his latest statement today, which repudiated an alleged confession that he strangled his sister, was quoted by his attorney as saying he took the blame for her death to protect Mrs. Dobbins after he said she had taken poison tablets.

The youth previously had been quoted by police as saying he strangled and then put poison tablets in her mouth. Traces of poison were found by hospital attendants and this caused police to doubt Devinney's first statements, in which he said he strangled her.

Devincy's latest statement said he had taken two of Mrs. Dobbins' children to his mother's, and returned to find his sister stricken. He said he then grappled with her to prevent her taking any more poison. The youth said his sister lately had repeatedly talked of suicide and that last night she appeared extremely despondent.

Cabinet of Poland Hands in Resignation

WARSAW, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Premier Walery Slawek, after a cabinet meeting, today handed in the resignations of himself and his government to President Mosciciki. The resignations were immediately accepted.

Marshal Pilsudski, who had consented to be minister of war in the Slawek cabinet, probably will be asked to form a new ministry.

Colonel Slawek's reason for resigning was that he had been greatly fatigued by his duties as head of the government and chairman of the parliamentary coalition co-operating with the government. He said he needed a rest.

The government of Colonel Slawek was formed in March of this year after long and difficult political negotiations. In it Marshal Pilsudski was minister of war.

A political crisis in the diet, where the center and left deputies were deadlocked with the followers of the marshal, caused the failure of two attempts to establish a strong cabinet before Colonel Slawek succeeded. The cabinet embodied the views of the so-called "colonels' group," supporters of Pilsudski.

Fulton County's Most Elaborate Elementary School Cornerstone Laid; Ready by September 5

Fulton county's latest entry in the educational field, the modern new Lena H. Cox elementary school at Grove Park, is shown in the above picture. The institution was constructed at a total cost of $100,000, including building, grounds and equipment. It is of the latest construction. The lower picture, left to right, shows Jere A. Wells, superintendent of Fulton county schools; Mrs. Cox, principal in whose honor and service the school was named; Judge Thomas H. Jeffries, veteran ordinary of Fulton county, who represented Hugh W. Taylor, Cuthbert, Grand Master of Georgia Masons at the cornerstone laying exercises Saturday afternoon, and Dr. M. L. Duggan, Georgia state school superintendent, viewing the cornerstone. The event was marked by a picnic and speaking in which many officials, including Fulton county commissioners, participated.

Fulton county's most elaborate elementary school will be open to the students of the Grove Park section beginning September 5, start of the 1930-31 term.

Saturday the cornerstone was laid at elaborate ceremonies attended by celebrities in state and county educational circles, and presided over by Jere A. Wells, superintendent of county schools.

Preceded by a picnic dinner which was attended by scores of persons from all walks of life, and especially by officials of Fulton county, the cornerstone laying was one of the most impressive affairs staged in the county school system for many months.

It also marks the 10th time Georgia Masons have laid cornerstones for modern new buildings during the six-year administration of Mr. Wells.

Dr. M. L. Duggan, Georgia state superintendent of schools, made the principal address, at a speaking fest just before the exercises at the laying were begun.

Included in the list of Fulton county officials who attended were Dr. W. L. Gilbert, chairman of the Fulton county commissioners; Paul S. Etheridge, chairman of the public works committee of the commission; Judge John D. Humphries, of Fulton county superior court; Judges E. D. Thomas and Virlyn B. Moore, also judges of Fulton county courts; R. L. Ramsey, principal of the Fulton County High school, and Arthur Wrigley, vice chairman of the Fulton county board of education.

The school formerly was the Grove Park school, but patrons signed a unanimous petition that the school be named in honor of the principal, Mrs. Lena H. Cox, for many years head of the institution, and the board of education has so designated it as a tribute "to her faithful and conscientious service and to her untiring efforts in the education of the youth of Fulton county."

Cost of the new structure including the five-acre tract on which it sits, is $100,000, and every modern convenience known in the science of education has been incorporated in it to make it the most up to the minute structure in the entire system.

Mrs. S. H. Ransbotham, president of the Parent-Teacher Association, delivered a short address of thanks to the school heads and the county commissioners for their co-operation in providing the new building.

Superintendent Wells then presented Mrs. Cox.

"When the September term opens here, this school will be 21 years old," Mrs. Cox stated. "The faculty has grown from two teachers and a few students to a faculty of 19 and nearly 700. I know that I will have the co-operation of the parents and students in making this institution the best in the Fulton county system."

"The public school system is the most important agency in Georgia, even though it has been treated many times like the proverbial step-child," Dr. Duggan declared. "We are making progress in education, and we believe that somewhere, somehow a better time for education is just ahead of us in Georgia."

"Every section of the state has made marked progress in education, and Fulton county has set the pace, making greater progress than any other of Georgia's counties. This new building should be an inspiration not only to school officials and the faculty, but also to the students as well."

"This physical building is only the workshop for the construction of character and citizenship," Mr. Etheridge said. "Teachers of this state are engaged in the most fascinating occupation in the world, the moulding of the character of those whom they instruct. That is a sacred responsibility."

Judge Thomas H. Jeffries, veteran ordinary of Fulton county, represented Hugh W. Taylor, of Cuthbert, grand master of Georgia Masons, at the cornerstone laying ceremony.

The cornerstone, in addition to the seal, bears the following inscription:

"Laid by Grand Lodge of Georgia, F. & A. M. Hugh W. Taylor, G. M., Center Hill Lodge, No. 686. August 23, 1930. A. L. 5930."

An adjoining stone has the following inscription:

"Lena H. Cox school. Fulton county board of education: Cam D. Dorsey, chairman; Arthur Wrigley, vice chairman; W. E. Tallaferro, W. P. Anderson, T. W. Moore, Jere A. Wells, county school superintendent. Daniel & Beutell, architects. G. F. Wells, contractor."

The new Ben Hill school will be opened in about three weeks, Mr. Wells announced.

Mrs. McCormick Stands Ready To Obey Voters on Wet Issue

Illinois Democratic Candidate Remains Firm and Continues on "Out and Out Wet Platform."

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 23.—(AP) The prohibition issue in the Illinois senatorial campaign was clearly defined today with Ruth Hanna McCormick, the republican nominee, pledged to abide by the voters' decision in a referendum and James Hamilton Lewis, the democratic candidate, standing on an out and out "wet" platform.

Mrs. McCormick, who had always been considered a dry, announced at the republican state convention here yesterday that she stands ready to obey the mandate of the voters in the triple referendum on prohibition to be decided November 4, the same day as the senatorial election.

Her speech followed the announcement of the state G. O. P. platform containing a prohibition plank almost identical with Mrs. McCormick's stand. The plank, which pledged republican representatives in congress to carry out the will of their districts, was considered a compromise between the wet and dry factions in the party.

The democrats, meeting Wednesday, followed the lead of their standard bearer, former Senator Lewis, in favoring repeal of all prohibition legislation.

In the first statement she has made on prohibition since announcing her candidacy for the senate, Mrs. McCormick reaffirmed that she was personally a dry. She said, however, that she was a member of the republican party, which "pledges itself to be responsive to the will of the people," and she outlined specifically what course she would take if the various referendums are carried.

If the voters favor repeal of the eighteenth amendment she said she would vote to submit the question to the states. If the people decide for modification of the Volstead act she said her course would be "in sympathy with the principle so approved, but the definite course to be pursued would be dependent, of course, upon the nature of the modification demanded."

Concerning the third referendum relating to repeal of the Illinois search and seizure act, she said it was a "state law which I shall not now discuss."

Mrs. McCormick added that "until the constitutional amendment is repealed or until the Volstead act is repealed or amended, I stand squarely for enforcement of both measures."

STATE DRY CHIEF DEPLORES STAND.

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Dissatisfaction with the republican state convention's prohibition referendum platform was expressed tonight by George B. Safford, state Anti-Saloon league head.

"I have talked with a number of prominent drys about the platform, and I found none who was satisfied with it," he said. "And I am not satisfied myself.

"As to Mrs. McCormick's attitude, it is very noticeable that the Chicago wets formed one group that was particularly pleased. And the program as approved by the convention is the one that is being urged by wets all over the United States.

"As to the referendum, our belief is that the important thing for drys is to concentrate on the election of representatives in congress and the legislature on the basis of their records and expressions. That in itself is a sufficient referendum."

Exiled Ex-Khedive May Return to Egypt

CAIRO, Egypt, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Abbas Hilmi II, the former khedive of Egypt, who now is in exile at Aix-Les-Bains, France, has been injected into the country's political disputes.

Word has been received from him that he is ready to return to the throne if the nationalists, now opposing King Fuad, should summon him.

Abbas Hilmi is the grandson of the ruler whose excesses led Egypt to bankruptcy, causing the famous Arabi Pasha rebellion. This, in turn, brought about the British bombardment of Alexandria, the battle of Tel-El-Kebir, and the occupation of Egypt.

At the outbreak of the World War Abbas Hilmi supported the Turks against Britain, and was deposed.

The nationalist party, which the exiled ex-khedive today supports, is the party whose excessive demands on behalf of Egypt recently led to the breakdown of the London negotiations for an Anglo-Egyptian treaty.

Home Folks Welcome James J. Davis

SHARON, Pa., Aug. 23.—(AP)—"Jim Davis, of Sharon," otherwise Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, was honored by the home folks today.

It was "Davis homecoming" day, and among the notables present to honor the man who rose from a steel mill puddler to a place in the cabinets of three presidents and who is now the republican nominee for United States senate from Pennsylvania, was Vice President Charles Curtis.

The vice president, in an address at a theater filled with Davis' old neighbors and friends, discussed Davis' career as a public official and said he was well fitted for the post of United States senator, which he will seek in November.

New Attack on Jews Alleged in Balkans

BUCHAREST, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The Jewish Telegraph Agency reports that renewed attacks on Jews are occurring in Bessarabia, where adherents of the anti-Semitic Iron guard maltreated members of the Jewish population at the summer resorts of Terkarnoli and Movilla. A few of the Iron guard leaders were arrested by the police.

Stolsowki, a village near Baltzi, was also the scene of anti-Semitic outrages, Jews being beaten, property looted and houses fired. The harvest which already had been gathered was set on fire and several Jews were seriously wounded by revolver shots.

In other villages Jewish houses were plundered and everything movable was taken by the marauders.

Bishop W. A. Candler Begins His 74th Year

Bishop Warren A. Candler, senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, celebrated his 73d birthday Saturday by going about his duties in the usual manner. Bishop Candler, whose home is at 1652 North Decatur road, left Atlanta at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of his birthday to fill an engagement in the pulpit of the First Methodist church, of Birmingham, Ala., where he will preach this morning.

Before his departure Saturday Bishop Candler, who enjoys a wide acquaintance among outstanding churchmen and members of the laity, received many letters and telegrams containing birthday greetings from friends and admirers throughout the country.

Porter King Named Ward Traffic Agent

Porter King, of Havana, Cuba, former Atlantan and a nephew of the late ex-Mayor Porter King, has been appointed traffic agent for the Ward Steamship Lines, it was announced Saturday, the appointment to take effect September 1.

Mr. King's appointment follows a residence of 11 years in the Cuban capital, where he has served as general agent for the Illinois Central railroad and the P. & O. Steamship Company. He is known to many friends in Atlanta.

Stealing From Patch And Wagon Differs

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 23.—(AP)—The law can wink at stealing watermelons from the patch but stealing from a farmer's wagon while members of the "gang" hold off the owner with brick bats is another matter, Municipal Judge Montgomery decided today.

Four small negro boys learned to appreciate the distinction at a cost of $11.40 each.

The boys admitted three of their number pelted a farmer with bricks and stones while the fourth appropriated several melons. The farmer was forced to retire and all four then raided the wagon.

As You Like It Is Promise Of Von Herrmann

Little, if any, change in Atlanta's weather will be noted for the next several days, Director C. F. von Herrmann, meteorologist in charge of the local weather bureau station, said Saturday in officially forecasting a fair day today.

Saturday's high temperature was 78 and the low was 60. Between these two figures the thermometer will probably play for the next week, Mr. von Herrmann said.

'Poison Potion' Only Medicine, Says Woman

An overdose of medicine, and not poison, as previously rumored, sent Mrs. Evelyn Russell, 27, of 555 Boulevard terrace, to Grady hospital, she declared Saturday after being allowed to return to her home after treatment.

The visit to the hospital was the second made by Mrs. Russell this week. Thursday she was treated for knife wounds said to have been inflicted by Mrs. W. E. Cone. Mrs. Russell said she had taken an overdose of the medicine prescribed by her physician, and was relieved when hospital attendants applied a stomach pump.

Heated Campaign for Vacated Seats in Council Forecast

Call of Special Primary Looms, With Murphy as Author of Plan.

With 15 candidates qualified for councilmanic positions to be filled in the general election, prospects for the most heated general election in Atlanta's history were indicated Saturday.

Unless Alderman J. Charlie Murphy, of the eleventh ward, offers his resolution at council's session Monday week to call a special primary, it is said, the city democratic executive committee will not act and all the contests will be decided in the general election. Alderman Murphy is still considering the move and indicated Saturday that he will ask council to request the democratic committee for the primary.

Saturday's Entries.

Two new entries Saturday sent their formal notifications to Mayor I. N. Ragsdale. L. P. Loyd, Atlanta insurance man, and a former member of the Georgia legislature from Newton county, will seek one of the councilmanic posts from the third ward, and Harry Morris will oppose Charles E. Markeles for the vacated councilmanic post in the second ward.

A four-cornered contest for the aldermanic position in the seventh has developed with Dr. W. H. Varn, J. M. Barnwell, J. C. Aldredge and W. C. Stradley seeking it.

Three will fight it out for the ninth ward aldermanic office—R. F. Jordan, J. R. Seawright and Hugh E. Lyndon.

J. Sid Tiller, prominent labor leader, also is seeking one of the two councilmanic posts which will be vacated in the third.

Eighth Ward Race.

J. A. Beall and Frank R. Fling are opposing each other for the eighth ward aldermanic post, and W. M. Rogers is aspiring to the seventh ward councilmanic seat.

William C. Slate, veteran member of the board of education from the second ward, is a candidate to fill the unexpired term in the second.

All the vacancies have been caused by resignations from council due to the probe into municipal graft, virtually all those who were indicted have quit their seats, and officers to succeed them for the unexpired term must be elected in the general election.

Even if the primary is called, only nominees will be designated in that election, the nominee being forced to enter the general election.

Winners Must Return $30,170 In Florida Suit

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., Aug. 23.—(AP)—The fight of the town of Palm Beach, fashionable winter resort, to oust seaplane and speed boat bases, entered a new phase today when Circuit Judge C. E. Chillingworth ordered four defendants to the town's condemnation suit to make a remittance of $30,170.

A jury had awarded the defendants a total of $123,133 compensation for their bases in the condemnation proceedings. The town's attorneys asked for a new trial, claiming the compensation was excessive. If the defendants refuse to make the remittances by September 2, the order states, the new trials will be granted in the respective cases, otherwise the new trial motion will be denied.

Defendants in the suit are the Roosevelt Flying Corporation, Curtiss-Wright Flying Service, which maintain bases on lake front land; the E. B. Jones Marine Corporation, speed boat operators, and the Palm Beach Improvement Corporation, owner of land involved in the condemnation proceedings.

The town council of Palm Beach voted to get rid of the seaplane and speed boat bases as a step toward a noise elimination campaign for the wealthy resort.

City Will Collect Notes Due Gangster

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—(UN)—Unpaid notes found in the safe deposit boxes of the late Jack Zuta, North Side gang leader, to the embarrassment of numerous judges and other public officials, took on a new meaning today when the public administrator announced he was preparing to collect the slain gangster's loans.

The settlement of Zuta's estate became the duty of the administrator when the business manager of the Moran-Aiello gang died intestate in a Wisconsin roadhouse where his gangland enemies put him "on the spot."

Whether Zuta intended to collect on the notes given him by his "pals" in public office and places of influence is immaterial, said Attorney Don Peebles, representing Public Administrator Halbert O. Crews.

Among recipients of financial favors from Zuta who may find themselves named as defendants in suits by the administrator are Municipal Judge Joseph W. Schulman, Police Chief William O. "Old Pal" Freeman, of Evanston, and Police Sergeant Richard J. Williams.

Three of Judge Schulman's notes, totaling $3,000, besides four checks, amounting to $1,400 on which payment had been stopped, were found in Zuta lock boxes.

Illinois W. C. T. U. Is in Quandary

JANESVILLE, Wis., Aug. 23.—(AP)—A resolution which would have withdrawn support of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. from the leading candidates for governor, because they all are avowed wets, was voted down overwhelmingly at a start rally this afternoon.

The two republican candidates, Phil LaFollette, progressive, and Walter J. Kohler, conservative, and the democratic candidate, Charles E. Hammersley, have declared either for modification or repeal of the 18th amendment and Volstead act.

U. S. May Take Hand In Ford Racket War

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The federal district attorney's office announced today after a conference with state forces investigating charges of food profiteering here that federal indictments would be sought immediately if Assistant State's Attorney General Groat so directed.

"We are ready and eager to prosecute any person or group of persons shown to be combining to illegally raise the price of foodstuffs," Assistant United States Attorney Unger said.

Expert accountants are going over books of food dealers and truck men and it was said the government might enter the case to determine if income tax payments had been evaded.

ARRESTS TO FURNISH BOND CASES CHARGED

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—A grand jury investigation was demanded here today to determine whether professional bondsmen were "in collusion with the police" to cause arrests merely for the purpose of creating bonds.

The action climaxed a five-day controversy among officials over the prosecution of liquor law violations in the capital. It was precipitated by statements attributed to police judges indicating they believed police had been overzealous in their charges in prohibition cases, and by a suggestion from the assistant United States attorney in charge of violations that only nominal bonds be assessed at the time of arrests.

Milton Kronheim, president of the Professional Bondsmen's Association, here, said he would ask the district attorney to investigate the situation to determine if "there is any truth in the statement" that bondsmen and police are working together.

The controversy over liquor law prosecutions here started when Assistant United States Attorney Hart refused to prosecute 13 of 25 cases recently given him by police on the grounds some of the raids had been made without warrants, or were otherwise illegal.

Soundless 'Talkie' Filmed for Deaf

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 23.—(AP)—A soundless "talkie" has been filmed for the Deaf Mute's Union league, it was announced today. The dialogue is entirely in sign language.

The picture tells the history of the league's founding as related by its first president, Samuel Frankenheim, of New York.

Amateur theatrical movies for deaf mute audiences are planned by Max Lubin, chairman of the league's literary committee, who has become a cameraman for this particular kind of production.

Whale Plays Havoc In Pacific Harbor

SHELTON, Wash., Aug. 23.—(AP)—The turmoil created by wounded 45-foot whale paralyzed shipping here yesterday.

The whale was discovered in a log pond which it had reached through miles of inland waters. Jimmy Freeman, log rolling expert, donned his calked shoes and climbed aboard. He drove a harpoon into the giant mammal and tied it to a log raft. The whale then was shot 10 times with a rifle.

The wounded mammal struggled back to the bay dragging the raft with it. Boatsmen gave it wide berth as it threshed about the harbor.

When its struggles ceased the whale was anchored to a light buoy. Just as observers decided the mammal was dead, it revived and rushed for deep waters.

A second whaling party rushed to the scene in a power boat from Tacoma. A. M. Aiken, its leader, harpooned the leviathan which escaped after a fierce struggle. Three hours later the party captured it a third time.

Flies Upside Down For 31 Minutes

BREMEN, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Gerd Achgelis, a German stunt flyer, today flew 31 minutes on his back, with one passenger. He claimed a world record for upside down flying.

SCHOOLS OF COUNTY WILL REOPEN SEPT. 5

Added Faculties Ready for Larger Enrollment.

Fulton county schools will open Friday, September 5, it was announced Saturday by Jere A. Wells, superintendent. On that date all students who attended the county schools last year, as well as those who will enter this year for the first time, are requested to report to their respective schools at 8:30 o'clock for registration and classification.

Wednesday morning, September 3, a meeting of all teachers in the county school system will be held, beginning at 9:30 o'clock at Fulton High school. All elementary and high school teachers are required to attend this meeting for instruction with regard to the opening of the fall term.

Enrollment Increased.

Registration to date, Superintendent Wells said, shows an increase in enrollment over that of last year, but not as great as that for 1929 over the preceding term. Approximately 700 more students will enter county schools this fall than in 1929, at which time 10,553 elementary students and 1,951 high school students were enrolled.

"The worst overcrowded condition this year will be at Russell High, in East Point, where we are expecting 1,000 students," Superintendent Wells said. "The enrollment for the new North Side High school, to be opened for the first time this year, will be between 300 and 350 students."

"In addition to the North Side High school," Mr. Wells continued, "we will open a large new elementary school at Grove Park that will accommodate 700 students, and also a new school at Ben Hill, where we expect an enrollment of 150. We have erected two new negro schools, one in south Atlanta and one in College Park, during the vacation period, and have made needed repairs at most of the other schools. All these schools will be ready for opening September 5."

New Teachers Named.

Three former teachers resigned during the vacation period, it was announced. Miss Sara Moon, Miss Beatrice Dobbins and Miss Wilma Peebles tendered resignations and have been replaced by Miss Margaret Blanchard, Miss Mattie Mundy and Miss Ida Shepard. At the May election of teachers for the county system, provision was made for 15 additional teachers to care for the increased enrollment expected in September. All places thus have been filled and accepted.

Knox Walker, former superintendent of schools at Dublin, has assumed his duties as elementary supervisor, succeeding R. L. Ramsey, who becomes principal of Fulton High school, made vacant by the transfer of W. F. Dykes to the principalship of North Fulton High school.

Senator H. J. Allen Is Seriously Ill

WICHITA, Kan., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Senator Henry J. Allen, of Kansas, is ill and is being brought back to Wichita aboard a special railroad car by a party of New York bankers with whom he visited Mexico City, Mrs. Allen said today.

The senator will arrive here tomorrow morning. Mrs. Allen said he was not well before starting on the trip, and that he had taken it as a means of obtaining a rest. The party spent about two weeks in Mexico City.

Mrs. Allen was not sure as to the nature of the senator's illness. She said messages to her did not indicate his condition is serious. Friends say Senator Allen always has been affected adversely by high altitudes, and they believe this was the trouble while at Mexico City.

Louisiana Acadians Find Grand Pre's Old Forests Still Standing Primeval

A group of Louisiana Acadians, shown before they left Boston last week en route to Grande Pre for a reunion. In the center with Baton Rouge for her ribbon is Corrinne Brossard, chosen from the group as "Evangeline."

BY WILLIAM O. KEY, JR.

Beneath the ancient willows of Grand Pre, Nova Scotia, where 175 years ago an entire colony of pious Acadians were torn from their beloved cottages and herded aboard British boats, later to be distributed in various American and English colonies—many never to again see their native land—40 southern girls, direct descendants of the original Acadians, are present to take part during August in the historic anniversary.

Back in the land of the legendary Evangeline, of Longfellow's beautiful poem, the pilgrimage of these two-score southern girls from their own Acadia in Louisiana is symbolic of the deathless love the Basque-Bretons bore for the fertile expanses of Nova Scotia. And their return brings once more to memory the dramatic wanderings of Evangeline.

It brings afresh to memory, too, that the outcast people of the north country, in seeking new homes as fertile and as lovely as that from which they were driven, came southward—always southward, large numbers of them colonizing in the land near the southern Mississippi, while others stopped in the Carolinas, Pennsylvania and Connecticut.

In primitive Nova Scotia, according to the historian, Rene Bazin, there landed in the summer of 1604 some 123 Basques and Bretons, who had obtained a charter to that region from King Henry IV, of France, who was sympathetic with their desires to found a priory. Many died of the unusual rigors of the first winter, and in 1606 another expedition set out from Havre de Grace.

Rapidly the settlements of the newcomers grew into villages, and it was this ability to thrive that brought on the jealous depredations of the British government, whose numbers on the American continent could not keep pace with the growth of the French colonists.

Thus it was that in 1745 the British governor in America wrote to the Duke of Newcastle, suggesting that "it would be wise to deport the Acadians." Not until June 28, 1755, however, did the British carry out the first step of this idea. It was on that date that the British governor, Lawrence, gave the order to start deporting all French Acadians. And, caught unawares and unarmed, the men of the peaceful settlements were herded between lines of bayonets and muskets onto British sloops in the Bay of Fundy. Longfellow's description dramatizes that of the foremost historians:

There disorder prevailed, and the tumult and stir of embarking.
Busily plied the freighted boats; and in the confusion.
Wives were torn from their husbands, and mothers, too late, saw their children

Grand Pre was sacked and burned; women, in many cases, left behind, were corralled the next spring and with stray children distributed in strange, unfriendly ports, mostly to die in misery. It was in such manner that the prototype of the Evangeline known the world over, was separated from her betrothed. Acadians of today name the long-suffering girl Emmeline la Biche, and will tell you that Longfellow's "Gabriele" was not the lover, because it was one Louis Arceneaux. And—they will insist—Emmeline did not find Louis on his death bed in a Philadelphia almshouse as did the legendary Evangeline, but instead she found him at St. Martinsville, La.; and he had forgotten his first love and was wed to another. Down at St. Martinsville there is a little tombstone beneath a sheltering oak tree, known far and wide as the "Evangeline Oak," to prove it.

Months and sometimes years passed by before the Acadians saw their native home again. They grew tired, weary of wandering from place to place, says the poet:

Friends they sought and homes; and many, despairing, heart-broken,
Asked of the earth but a grave, and no longer a friend or fireside.

But their love for Acadia was stronger than the hatred of their enemies. In 1771 the Nova Scotia government was astounded to find there were 1,249 Acadians living in that province. In 1790 this number had grown to 8,000, and today it is estimated that nearly 250,000 Acadians are back in their early home sites. The trees are there, and the long, waving fields of wheat and rye.

Evangeline and Gabriele?

Still stands the forest primeval; but far away from its shadow,
Side by side, in their nameless graves, the lovers are sleeping.
Under the humble walls of the little Catholic churchyard.
In the heart of the city they lie, unknown and unnoticed.

West Palm Beach Plans More Taxes

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Levying by the city of a 10 per cent tax on amusements and public utilities products, and a cent a gallon gasoline tax, to help pay the city's bonded debt, will be discussed at a meeting of the city commission next Tuesday.

The plan was submitted by City Attorney J. Mark Wilcox, who also is chairman of the taxation and finance committee of the Florida League of Municipalities.

It was suggested as a means of meeting the bonded debts, for which suits totaling millions of dollars have been filed against the city.

Policeman Charged With Owning Liquor

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Policeman Charles M. Howell today stood charged with transportation and possession of liquor as the result of seizure by federal prohibition agents of a truckload of home brew which the policeman was convoying through the streets last night to a meeting of the Timothy Lynch post of the American Legion.

Prohibition Agent Lake Holland said the policeman told him that he was riding on the truck to see that the beer went through the streets unmolested. Several hundred bottles of beer were seized.

Carolina Textile Strike Is Settled

BESSEMER CITY, N. C., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Sol Goldberg, son of the president of the American Mills Nos. 1 and 2, said this afternoon a strike at the two textile plants which went into effect Monday had been settled.

The agreement was reached this afternoon at a meeting of strikers at American Mills No. 1, at which R. C. Gregory, chairman of the strikers' committee, spoke, Goldberg told the Associated Press. Employes of the No. 2 mill had arrived at an agreement just previously, he said.

Workers will return to work Monday, Mr. Goldberg declared.

The strikers accepted the management's offer to restore wages to their level before a reduction announced Monday, in protest of which the operatives walked out, Goldburg said. Their demand for reduction of house rent from fifty cents to 25 cents a room was dropped, he said.

Snatcher of Woman's Purse Is Captured

Nabbed by private citizens after a chase of several blocks, James Edwards, negro, residing in the rear of 50 Pine place, was being held Saturday night by police on a charge of attempting to snatch the purse of Mrs. L. W. Stanton, of 690 Juniper street, late Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Stanton told the police that the negro attempted to grab her pocketbook at Juniper and Third streets, and that when she screamed he ran. Several men hearing her cries gave chase and caught Edwards at Piedmont and Ponce de Leon avenues. His hearing has been set for August 30.

Carol and Brother Would Wed Beauties

VIENNA, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The newspaper Allgemeine Zeitung carried a story from Bucharest today saying Mme. Magda Lupescu, the companion of King Carol II in exile, had been in the Rumanian capital 24 hours and the public was openly discussing the possibility of her morganatic marriage to the king.

At the same time it was said that Carol's brother, Prince Nicholas, had asked the king's permission to wed Mme. Lucia Doneti Dimitrescu, a Rumanian famed for her beauty, but not of noble birth.

Premier Juliu Maniu was said to be violently opposing both marriage projects.

GRAY HAIR DISTRESSED THIS YOUNG LADY NOT YET THIRTY

Four Bottles of New Hair Tonic Has Banished the Dandruff and Gray Hairs Are Back to Youthful Color Now

READ HER DELIGHTED STORY TOLD HERSELF

"It was really embarrassing to be not over thirty years old and have gray hair and itchy annoying dandruff. It was causing my hair to comb out by the handful and my scalp seemed so dry and itchy all the time," writes Mrs. Gray, whose picture appears on the right. "Then I learned about Lea's Hair Tonic and it is nothing short of a miracle what it did for me. Four bottles and a weekly shampoo with their powder did it. The first bottle made such a wonderful improvement I kept on and today my scalp is as healthy as can be. Not a bit of dandruff any more and you should have seen the gray hairs go back to its former color as a girl. I rubbed it into my scalp sparingly every night so obtained quick results," continued Mrs. George Gray, of Alexandria, Minn.

Anyone may obtain the same results. Dandruff and gray hairs are not at all the fashion in these hustling times. Be better groomed and keep young looking if you wish to forge ahead socially or in business. No one need be designated as the gray haired party any more. Obtain a bottle of your druggist, or send $1 to Lea Tonic Co., Brentwood, Mo., for bottle return mail if store hasn't it yet. Results guaranteed satisfactory in six weeks or money refunded on demand.—(adv.)

Southern Rural Library Service Plans Launched

Miss Tommie Dora Barker To Direct Program Looking to Establishment of Book Centers.

An aggressive program for the promotion of library service for the rural population of the south, with the county as a working unit, has been organized, Miss Tommy Dora Parker, newly named southern regional field agent of the American Library Association, announced Saturday.

Miss Barker, who has resigned as librarian of the Carnegie Library of Atlanta to assume the new position on September 15, said the local office of the national association was being established at the request of southern librarians and because of the growing demand for libraries in the southern states.

Twofold Purpose.

The purpose of the regional office will be twofold, she said. First, it will act in an advisory capacity. Second, it will act as a bureau of information on all matters relating to the organization and development of library programs.

This new library activity, Miss Barker explained, is the outgrowth of the program of the Julius Rosenwald Fund for the promotion of county libraries in the south. Early in 1929 the Rosenwald Fund set aside $500,000 as an initial fund for making grants to counties to inaugurate county-wide library service.

In 1929, at the request of the fund, the Southeastern Library Association appointed a policy committee to act in an advisory capacity, and in December the committee at a meeting in Atlanta drew up a far-reaching program for library development in the south.

One of the needs expressed in this program was for a local representative of the American Library Association. Another need found was for a survey of the library training situation in the south so as to determine what types of training were needed for librarians and where training agencies should be located. This survey was made in the spring of 1930 by Miss Sarah C. N. Bogle, of the American Library Association, assisted by Miss Barker. The report on this survey will be issued during the fall.

Miss Barker, in her announcement Saturday, called attention to the fact that in the southern states there are over 1,000 counties, and in only 40 of these, she said, do the inhabitants have access to county-wide public library service. She said it has been established by surveys that more than 70 per cent of the population does not have access to free public library service of any kind.

R-K-O LEASES CAPITOL FOR FIVE-YEAR PERIOD

Vaudeville Expected To Be Dropped From Programs After September 1.

Announcement was made Saturday by the Universal Film Corporation, owners of the Capitol theater, that that house has been leased to Radio-Keith-Orpheum for five years, starting September 1. It was understood the theater will be operated exclusively as a picture house, without vaudeville. This arrangement makes the Capitol a member of an interstate chain of R-K-O theaters under the direction of Karl Hoblitzer, whose headquarters are in San Antonio, Texas.

This announcement follows on the heels of the change at the Fox theater, by which its operation will bring the choicest of both Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures to that house. Under the change, Carter Barron, who has been manager of the Capitol, becomes manager of the Fox. A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, "Romance," is showing this week at the Fox, while the Capitol offers a Universal feature entitled "The Storm." Loew's vaudeville, which has been part of the Capitol programs, will, presumably, not be seen in the city in the future.

Fanchon and Marco stage presentations will continue to play the Fox, while it also is understood that R-K-O vaudeville also will remain as a program feature at Keith's Georgia theater.

This week, prior to the assumption of the R-K-O lease of the Capitol, that theater is under Universal operation, with a stage program consisting of local radio entertainers announced as supplemental to the screen program.

The name of the Capitol manager under the R-K-O operation after September 1 was not announced Saturday.

Varied Program Is Taking Shape For Labor Day

An all-day program featuring a street parade in the morning, a triple racing program in the afternoon at Lakewood park and a dance at night, has been planned by the Atlanta Federation of Trades for its annual Labor Day celebration.

All Lakewood features in the afternoon and at night will be free to the public, and other entertainments and amusements are being planned to make the celebration one of the most interesting Atlanta has ever enjoyed on Labor Day.

The Atlanta Federation of Trades and the Southeastern Fair Association, through its secretary and general manager, Oscar Mills, are co-operating in staging the Lakewood program.

Following the morning parade a luncheon will be served at the Henry Grady hotel.

The Lakewood racing program will start at 2:15 o'clock.

In addition to the triple motor racing program, 11 athletic events will be held for members of the trades federation and their families. Three cash prizes will be awarded to the winners in each of the track events.

An extensive fireworks display will be touched off across the lake at 8 o'clock, and the day's activities will end with a dance in the big Lakewood pavilion. The fireworks display will be one of the most complete ever attempted here, and several novelty features have been designed especially for Labor Day.

Plans for the parade are being perfected by a special committee and will be submitted to members of the executive committee at a meeting early this week. The afternoon and night program has been left with another committee, which is working in conjunction with officials of the fair association.

Members of the Labor Day committee include A. S. Nance, president of the federation; George F. Haney, chairman; L. W. Pittman, G. T. Pearce, Fred K. Stephens, Alex Woodson, W. C. Caraway, H. C. Taylor, Charles Williams, J. Ben Daniel, W. M. Welsh, J. B. Spier, J. F. Scott, S. C. Mann, Harry MaGhee and William Van Houten.

K. of C. Plans Annual Bridge, 'Cue Wednesday

Members of the Knights of Columbus, Atlanta council No. 660, will stage their annual barbecue at 6 o'clock Wednesday night in the clubhouse at 1200 Peachtree street. The affair will be supplemented by a bridge party, which will follow the barbecue.

Constituting one of the highlights of the session's entertainment program of the local organization, the barbecue is expected to be the center of a large and colorful gathering. Handsome prizes will be awarded to the successful players in the bridge party.

Arrangements for Wednesday night's function are being conducted under the direction of J. A. Harvey and J. C. Gavan, assisted by members of a special committee.

"In order that all may enjoy the affair and that each may receive ample refreshments and secure a table for bridge," the committee heads announced, "it will be necessary to close the ticket sale Monday night. The tickets will be obtainable from any member of the committee or from the secretary of the club until that time.

"It is found that the club offers facilities not otherwise obtainable, in that in case of rain we have ample space to hold the entertainment indoors. However, it is contemplated to use the grounds surrounding the club, which are large and will add a homelike atmosphere to the occasion.

"All members of the order, the ladies' auxiliary and their friends are urged to obtain their tickets early, as indications are that there will be one of the largest crowds ever to be witnessed at one of these affairs."

Wide Search Planned for Missing Georgia Girl

FEDERAL SERVICE WILL BE ASKED TO AID IN HUNT

Winder Man Still Held On Kidnaping Charge in Disappearance of Wife's Niece Two Years Ago.

DENIES KNOWLEDGE OF WHEREABOUTS

Authorities Trace Journey of Florence Bell, 50, Who Disappeared Same Day as 20-Year-Old Girl.

ATHENS, Ga., Aug. 23.—A nationwide search, in which newspapers and the radio, as well as the help of the federal secret service, will be employed, will be instituted to locate Miss Vera Autry, pretty 20-year-old Oconee county girl, who disappeared from her home in February, 1928, it was announced here tonight by Solicitor-General H. H. West, in charge of the state investigation. Florence Bell, 50-year-old Winder man, is now being held in jail at Watkinsville in connection with the case, on a charge of kidnaping.

Meanwhile, Solicitor West said, new leads have been uncovered by investigators which may result in accurately tracing the journey of Bell after he disappeared from his home on the same day the girl was found missing.

Information has come to the investigators that Bell was seen at Corpus Christi, Texas, and Middletown, Ky., shortly after he left home. It was definitely established that he was in Middletown shortly after he left here.

No information has been advanced, however, as to whether a girl was with him at that time.

The solicitor said Saturday night that the United States government secret service, newspapers and radio will be asked to join in the search for the girl who has not been communicated with since she left home. The girl, 18 years of age at the time she left, has been described as interested in church activities and shortly before she disappeared was one of the principals in an Epworth league minstrel at Watkinsville.

Bell also is said to have been prominent in church activities, and belonged to a leading family. He was one of the founders of the Bell Overall Company at Winder, and his father was one of the stockholders in the Winder Cotton Mill.

The Bells at one time were wealthy, and Florence Bell is said to have been a man of means at the time he left home. He says he left his home because of a disagreement with his wife.

Bell still refuses to talk about the case, except to deny he left with the girl or has seen her. Solicitor West, who returned tonight from Winder where he has been investigating the case, revealed that after Bell was arrested fellow prisoners and the jailer at Watkinsville saw in his suit case a picture of the girl, which he tore to pieces when he discovered it was known.

LIVINGSTON WINS SOUTHERN DERBY.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Status of the six air derbies converging on Chicago for the national air races was as follows Saturday night:

Jack Livingston won the southern men's derby, Brownsville, Texas, to Chicago, landing at Curtiss field, Chicago, scene of national air races, Saturday afternoon. Livingston led his competitor, W. G. Moore, Kansas City, by 1 hour, 18 minutes. His time was 16 hours, 28 minutes, 52.7 seconds for the 1,800 miles.

Mrs. Phoebe Omlie, of New York, continued to lead the women's Dixie derby which landed at Atlanta, Ga., Saturday afternoon. Vera Dawn Walker, one of the Dixie fliers, was forced down but continued on an hour and a half behind her competitors.

The men's class "A" Atlantic derby, Miami-Chicago, arrived at Cincinnati Saturday afternoon and the fliers decided to remain there until Sunday. Then they will take off for Chicago. They had been scheduled to

Rome, Ga., Salesman Held for Abduction

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 23.—(Special)—Frank Hicks, salesman for the Rome, Ga., poultry company is in the county jail here Saturday charged with the abduction of Virginia Moore, young Knoxville girl. He was arrested after E. D. Moore, father of the girl, said that Hicks is a married man. Moore's warrant charged that the accused took the girl away from her home against the will of her father.

Hicks will be given a hearing Tuesday before Squire John L. Mynatt.

York, 'Hero of Hill 223' To Be Guest of Veterans

MOUNTAINEER WARRIOR IDOL OF 82D.

Sergeant Alvin C. York, "outstanding individual hero of the World War, who shot down 20 or more Germans who were firing at him and brought in more than 100 as prisoners, will be a guest of honor at the first reunion of the Eighty-second division, to be held in Atlanta, September 26 to 28. He was trained at Camp Gordon and served with that division throughout the war.

Sergeant York has been busily engaged for years in building up and supporting a school for poor mountain boys in his native Tennessee mountains. A letter received Saturday by Captain Scott Candler, president of the Eighty-second division Association of Atlanta, announces that Sergeant York will attend the reunion in Atlanta. More than 1,000 other veterans of the "All-Americans," including Major General George B. Duncan, will assemble here from all over the country.

"I remember Alvin York very well," said Major Trammell Scott Saturday. "Just before our division was ordered to leave Camp Gordon for France, the orders came to weed out all aliens and conscientious objectors.

"Captain Edward Danforth, of the 328th regiment, came to me—I was adjutant of that regiment—and said he had a big, raw-boned Tennessee mountaineer in his company who could outshoot any man in the division, but who had been raised as an objector to fighting. He didn't want to lose this man, and suggested that I have a talk with him.

"York reported to me and we talked things over. Captain Danforth had read him extracts from the Scriptures relative to fighting when fighting was necessary. York told me he didn't want to kill any enemies, but if it came to a situation where it was kill or be killed, he reckoned he could pull a steady trigger. So we sent him overseas—and you know how steady a trigger he pulled. An enemy forehead was just a mark to York—like a squirrel's eye—he hit it every time."

Acting Sergeant Early, from whose company York was sent to round up the machine gunners on that eventful day, was seriously wounded, but it was not until about a month ago that he was awarded the Distinguished Service medal by congress. He is now a patient in the Walter Reed hospital at Washington, D. C.

Hundreds of writers have told the story of Corporal York's exploit—he was a corporal then—and there have been various exaggerations. But here it is, as told in the official history of the Eighty-second division:

"Early in the attack of the second battalion the progress of Company G on the left was seriously impeded by heavy machine gun fire from a hill directly southwest across the valley from Hill 223.

"A force of four non-commissioned officers and 13 privates was sent from G company to encircle the hill and silence the enemy guns. This detachment, under Acting Sergeant Early, encircled the hill from the southeast, passed through the heavy woods on the east crest and descended to the wooded ravine on the east side of the hill.

"The detachment came upon a German battalion, estimated to contain about 250 men, a considerable number of whom were machine gunners. About 75 Germans were crowded around their battalion commander, apparently engaged in receiving final instructions. A force of machine gunners and infantrymen, however, were lying in fox holes 50 yards away on the western slope of the hill. Other machine gun detachments were located on the north and northeast slopes of this same wooded hill.

"The Americans appeared as a complete surprise to this German battalion. The large body of Germans surrounding the German battalion commander began surrendering to our men, whom the enemy supposed to be the leading element of a large American force which had enveloped their position.

"German machine gunners on the hillside, however, quickly reversed

LonChaney'sCondition Disturbs Physicians

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Lon Chaney, motion picture character actor, was seriously ill from anemia tonight and although he had received two blood transfusions, studio officials expressed concern over his condition.

Pneumonia early this year left Chaney in a weakened condition. Leaving his sick bed he went to New York, consulting specialists concerning a throat affliction which hampered film work. On his return Chaney became a patient at St. Vincent's hospital.

One blood transfusion was given a few days ago and another last night, hospital attendants said.

State-Wide Interest Aroused in Perry-Holder Controversy.

Carswell Flays Barnett for Recent Statement. Candidates' Cards Bristle With Accusations.

BY FRANCIS W. CLARKE.

Direct accusation by one of the candidates for governor that Chairman Barnett, of the state highway board, had thrown his department into politics as the result of a recent statement; the charge that John N. Holder used E. D. Rivers as a "tool" to keep himself in office and has now turned on him; and the arising of an editorial in the Moultrie Observer as one of the outstanding features of the campaign so far, were high-water marks in the governorship race last week. The editorial is reproduced in full in another column of this page.

The senate race Saturday was marked by the exchange of cards, decidedly of a singeing nature, between the camps of Senator Harris and former Governor Slaton, although no new issues of importance arose.

Another new feature of the gubernatorial contest was the acceptance by the headquarters of Holder of the challenge from George H. Carswell to submit their respective candidacies to the people on the main issue of the diversion for one year of the $5,000,000 auto license revenue from the highway department to the payment of the state's back debts.

George H. Carswell, the candidate who first injected into the campaign the question of submitting definite plans for the remedying of the state's financial situation, Saturday openly accused the head of the highway board of aiding and abetting one of the gubernatorial candidates, adding the charge that 90 per cent of the department employes were engaging in political activity.

The statement cited by Carswell is one made by Captain Barnett on August 18, in which he declared that special federal aid funds could be matched provided no part of the highway funds was diverted.

Politics Charged.

"A simple-minded child reading Captain Barnett's statement," reads the Carswell statement, "could not err but would know that the statement is nothing more or less than a political card intended as an argument against this issue and in favor of one of the candidates for governor.

"Captain Barnett said any official or employe of the highway department playing politics would be fired. Who's going to fire the chairman for this political card that he issued? Furthermore, it is common knowledge that more than 90 per cent of the employes of the highway department are today going up and down this state spending practically all of their time in political activities and spreading political propaganda for one of the candidates for governor and not one of them has been fired."

Challenge Accepted.

Acceptance of the recent challenge of Carswell that his plan for payment of the state's debts be submitted to the voters as a main issue of the campaign, was contained in a statement issued Saturday by C. B. Allen, campaign manager for John N. Holder.

"John Holder," says the statement, "life time advocate of good roads and more interested now than ever in our great highway program, accepts the challenge of Mr. Carswell. He stands flat-footed and unmovable in his opposition to diverting highway money to any other cause now or in the future. He is carrying on the fight of the most heavily taxed people in our state—the small car owner—who is legion—upon whom a heavy license is levied with the pledge that the money collected from the tags will be devoted to building roads.

"He is ready to submit the issue to the people and will do so with perfect confidence."

Says Holder "Used" Rivers.

In a speech at Gainesville Saturday, Richard B. Russell, Jr., in commenting on what he called John N. Holder's "conversion" on the school book issue, declared:

"The voters realize this pretext of conversion is only done for expediency. Mr. Holder's constancy has never been his strong point. This can best be substantiated by Mr. Rivers, who was used by Mr. Holder as a tool to tie up the legislature that Mr. Holder might homestead on the highway chairmanship.

"Mr. Holder turns on Mr. Rivers in this campaign and attacks him for not being sincere in advocating a reorganization of the state government. Mr. Rivers is guilty but Mr. Holder, being the beneficiary, can in poor grace sentence him."

Rivers Has New Plan.

Rivers in a statement Saturday declares he has had to abandon his first announced plan to settle the financial affairs of the state, because of Governor Hardman's failure to follow his suggestion to seek authority from the voters at the November election to borrow sufficient money to pay all the state's back due debts.

"What I now propose," he continues, "is to pay our old soldiers, teachers and institutions with all the money available in the treasury immediately after my induction into office and let some of the high-salaried officials and other appropriations wait for their money. I will refuse to sign warrants to pay the political pap-suckers now parasites on our taxpayers while our old soldiers, teachers and insane are suffering."

In a speech delivered at Carrollton Saturday, James A. Perry reiterated

It is as follows:

"Originating Legislation."

"Governor Hardman has launched a movement for a 'tax survey' in Georgia. The investigations are to be made by an expert from a northern university. The plan the governor has in mind seems to be that of first working out a tax reform plan and then calling an extra session of the legislation to have the program enacted into law.

"Governor Hardman, of course, means well. This is not his first attempt to bring about tax reform. Before he was sworn in as governor, he visited several other states and studied their taxing systems. He was impressed with the system in use in Virginia. He sought to have the new ideas he gained enacted in law, but he ran up against this obstacle. The legislature will not accept a cut-and-dried plan.

"Governor Hardman has been highly successful in business, and he cannot get away from the idea that state affairs can be run like business and corporation affairs. His lack of understanding here has been his weakness as governor.

"You cannot run the state as you would run a corporation. It would be a great idea for the president of a corporation to have a survey made by experts and then call a meeting of directors for approval of changes. In state affairs it does not seem to work. We have to run government by the rule of politics and human nature.

"It seems that any one who has seen the Georgia legislature in session as often as Dr. Hardman would understand political psychology. You cannot tell 'em, You cannot drive 'em. You have to stand behind, put the bait on a long pole and hold it out in front of them. Slip them the idea from behind and let them lead. A good politician knows this better than a good business man.

"It occurs to the observer that it would have been a better plan to start this move with a group from the house and senate. Let them employ the outside help for the survey, and seek the counsel of business interests and farmers. Working under such a group the expert tax man, even though he came from a northern university, would have had some chance to sell an idea to the very men who must finally do the leading and the voting. Of course such procedure would take some of the glory from the office of governor, but it would give much better chance of success."

Self-Defense Plea Seen For Game Warden's Slayer

EMORY HYATT.

COVINGTON, Ga., Aug. 23.—While authorities Saturday continued an investigation into the fatal shooting of L. F. Boggus, Newton county game warden, Emory Hyatt, accused of the slaying, reiterated his denial that an old "grudge" was responsible for the killing.

Hyatt will be given a preliminary hearing at 10 o'clock Monday morning and is expected to plead self-defense. His brother, Charles Hyatt, also is being held in connection with the case.

Emory, according to officers, with his brother surrendered here shortly after the slaying and admitted the shooting. He said he had shot the game warden after Boggus had fired upon them four times.

The tragedy occurred Thursday on the Yellow river bridge. According to Emory's story, he and his brother met Boggus on the bridge and asked him if he was looking for someone. Hyatt said that the warden replied that he was looking for fishermen and then grabbed him by the collar.

In the scuffle, Emory told officers, that he wrested Boggus' shotgun from him and backed away about 20 paces. He said that Boggus then fired twice at his brother and two times at him before he felled the game warden with a load from the shotgun.

Authorities said that Hyatt's statement was partly corroborated when Boggus' pistol was found by his side with six empty shells. An investigation, however, has been centered on the theory that Emory killed Boggus because of a "grudge" three years old. Trouble between the two is said to have begun when Boggus arrested Hyatt for illegal fishing. Emory was convicted and sent to the chain gang for two years, and was released only three months ago.

POSTOFFICE SITE ACCEPTED BY U. S.

Permission for Building of Tunnel to Station Granted.

Assurance given by Mayor Ragsdale that its request to construct and maintain an underground tunnel would meet with no objection followed final acceptance by the government of the Spring and Hunter streets property on which it will build Atlanta's new postoffice.

Ferry K. Heath, assistant secretary of the treasury, notified Mayor Ragsdale that the government was ready to accept the proposal made by J. H. Taylor & Sons upon condition that it be permitted to build the tunnel. Postoffice officials indicated the tunnel would be constructed large enough for high speed electric transmission of the mail from the postoffice to the trains, and would be exclusively for the use of the postoffice department.

In the meantime, two parcels of the property embraced in the sale to the government will have to pass through condemnation proceedings, Robert Ramspeck, fifth district representative in congress, has said. Adjustment of price differences in this manner will not delay the project long, it is felt.

Mayor Ragsdale referred Mr. Heath's letter to the city engineer and advised:

"General council meets the first Monday in September, and I shall call this matter to their attention at this time.

"I am quite sure that there will be no objection to the request contained in your letter for the construction and maintenance of this underground tunnel; in fact, I can assure you in advance that directly after

SCHOOL CHARTER PLAN IS REVIVED

Citizens' Committee, To Aid in Drafting Change, May Come to Life.

Revival of a citizens' committee to assist in drafting changes in the city charter, which would "divorce the Atlanta board of education from city council and clothe it with authority to raise and expend its own revenue in administration of the public school system," will be sought in the very near future, it was indicated Saturday.

W. W. Gaines, veteran member of the board from the third ward, has worked on the proposal for many years, holding to the theory that the present system of having the mayor and council provide funds for another body to expend is unsound, both politically and economically, and that a change should be made.

E. R. Sweat, chairman of a special committee from the board, charged with the responsibility of attempting to evolve a feasible plan for the "protection of the system," and other members believe that the recommendation, if one is made, should come from a joint committee and after careful study of the problem.

In no other way can the citizens of Atlanta be sold on a change, it is believed.

A recommendation coming from the committee and the board would not have the weight which one having the sanction of an impressive array of citizens would carry, it was pointed out by Mr. Gaines.

Other members of the committee are now studying plans which Mr. Gaines worked out several years ago and which contemplate a reduction in the

ALL INDICATIONS POINT TO CHANGE IN FRONT IN 1932

Has About Arrived at Conclusion That Something Is Radically Wrong With Noble Experiment.

FESS, MILITANT DRY, CLOSES HIS MOUTH

Administration Spokesman Quelches Butler in Massachusetts — White House Supports Morrow.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(Special.)—President Hoover is taking definite steps to prevent identification of the republican party with the dry side of the prohibition issue, the New York World learned today. This information, confirmatory of a series of incidents showing the wind blowing in that direction, lends plausibility to the theory that the president has about decided there is something wrong with the noble experiment of which he spoke in 1928 and that he may have something definite to say on that subject in 1932.

The latest victim of presidential displeasure for attempts to make republicanism synonymous with prohibition is former Senator William M. Butler, of Massachusetts, erstwhile chairman of the republican national committee, who is now campaigning for the republican senatorial nomination on a dry platform. The theme of Butler's campaign has been that republicans must be dry to support the president.

Friend Protests Dry Plea.

That the president did not look with favor on this procedure was made evident yesterday in Boston when Christian A. Herter, former confidential secretary to Mr. Hoover, protested against what he termed Butler's insinuations "that republicans who favor the repeal of the 18th amendment are disloyal either to their party platform or to the president."

Mr. Herter, who is a candidate for the Massachusetts legislature, is generally regarded in Massachusetts as the mouthpiece of the president. He was intimately connected with Mr. Hoover for many years, both in the department of commerce and in connection with various relief enterprises.

The first tangible indication that the president is unwilling to have the dry label pinned on his party came last June when Dwight W. Morrow won the republican senatorial nomination in New Jersey on a platform advocating repeal of the 18th amendment. Before the election returns were complete the White House issued a statement declaring that "the White House will give every possible support to the republican nominee in New Jersey. The president and the administration have every confidence that Mr. Dwight W. Morrow will be the next senator from New Jersey."

Fess Changes Stand.

Then came the abrupt about-face executed by Senator Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio, after he had been chosen to fill Claudius Huston's reluctantly vacated shoes as chairman of the republican national committee. Prior to his selection as chairman, Senator Fess, in a statement given to Ohio newspapers, declared he welcomed prohibition as issue in the fall elections and that if the democrats took the wet side, republican success was assured. Within a week after he became chairman, however, Fess went out to Ohio, fresh from the conferences with the president and other administration leaders, and issued another statement saying that it was ridiculous to think that prohibition could be a campaign issue.

The hesitancy shown by the president's law enforcement commission in taking up prohibition, the subject it was created primarily to deal with, is taken as another indication that the administration wants to avoid being placed in a definitely dry position. Chairman Wickersham's suggestions on several occasions that perhaps prohibition enforcement might be taken over largely by the states, are interpreted as trial balloons sent up to judge public reaction to such a proposal in anticipation of 1932.

Boy of 11 Pleads Guilty as 'Legger

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 23.—(UN)—Clyde Cox, 11, was placed on probation for five years after he pleaded guilty to charges of violating the national prohibition act in United States district court. His father, Grover Cox, barbecue stand operator, pleaded guilty and sentence was continued. Prosecuting officers said the boy brought liquor from the stand to customers waiting in automobiles.

Mix Denies Grounds For Damage Action

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 23.—(AP)—A general denial to allegations in a $13,000 damage suit against Tom Mix, motion picture actor, was filed by his attorneys in district court today. John Berress, Minneapolis, automobile sales manager, complainant, charged the actor with "malicious and willful" assault. Mix recently made a threatrical appearance here.

Carswell Lays Politics To Highway Department

Charges That Recent Statement by Barnett Was Misleading.

That the state highway department was brought definitely into politics through a statement issued last week by Captain J. W. Barnett, chairman of the state highway department, is charged in a card issued from campaign headquarters of George H. Carswell, candidate for governor in the September primary.

The statement referred to declared that federal aid funds could not be matched by the state of Georgia if any of the money which has been going into the highway department is diverted for the purpose of paying the state's indebtedness of $5,000,000 to the public schools, the Confederate veterans and the asylum at Milledgeville.

Carswell has proposed that $5,000,000 of the state's auto tag tax money be diverted for one year only for the purpose of paying this debt. Barnett in his statement of August 18 also said that if this money is taken from the highway department, road building in Georgia will be crippled.

Carswell's statement is as follows:

"On May 18, 1930, Captain J. W. Barnett, chairman of the highway board, published in the press of this state a public statement in which he said that all people connected with the state highway department, employes and officials had been put on notice that politics is not part of their work or duties. They have been notified that the first evidence of the participation of any of them in their capacity connected with the highway department whether for or against either candidate, means that they are going to get into trouble about holding their jobs.

"That was mighty fine and every right-thinking man applauded the statement. In the press appearing under date of May 21, 1930, Captain Barnett, chairman of the highway department, spoke before the Atlanta Rotary Club and in outlining plans stated that the highway department with $12,000,000 available annually would construct 800 miles per year and that the state's system of 7,100 miles would be completed in six years.

"Later on Captain Barnett issued another statement in which he lauded the work of John N. Holder, former chairman of the board. At the time this statement was made, Captain Barnett knew that post-dated checks of the former chairman, John N. Holder, were being hawked about all over the state; that contractors and employes had not been paid; that it had been necessary for the chairman succeeding Mr. Holder to suspend operations and stop construction of highways in Georgia in order to cover up the deficit in the highway department. He knew that federal aid had been withheld from Georgia because of the extravagance and inefficiency of the former chairman, John N. Holder; that for nine and one-half months there was not a piece of road construction in Georgia because of the condition in which the highway department had been plunged by the former chairman, John N. Holder.

"In the face of the utterances by Captain Barnett about not permitting the highway department to engage in politics, on August 18, 1930, he gave out an interview which appeared on the front page of newspapers under heavy headlines as follows: 'State to Match United States Road Funds, Barnett asserts. Can't do so, however, if money is diverted to pay debts.'

In this statement Captain Barnett says that Georgia will be able to match three millions of dollars of federal aid funds in 1931. The allotment by the federal government to federal aid roads has already been announced as $3,316,092. Captain Barnett, in that statement, used the following language, 'Of course I mean that federal aid can be matched, if none of the highway funds are diverted.'

"This statement carries with it the inference that if any part of the highway funds are diverted that the state of Georgia cannot match federal aid.

Statement Misleading.

"The statement is misleading. Exact figures show that without the tag tax, federal aid can be matched. Mr. Barnett said himself that the highway board has an estimated income of $14,000,000 from state sources for next year. Captain Barnett certainly knows that the federal allotment for next year is $3,316,092. Captain Barnett knows, because he so states in terms, that there will be available, without the tag tax, from the gas tax approximately $9,000,000. Captain Barnett knows that the board can match federal aid which amounts to a little more than $3,000,000 as heretofore stated. Captain Barnett knows, as everyone else knows, that this will give the state highway board approximately $7,700,000 to be used for construction on federal aid projects in Georgia. There will then remain $5,650,000 to take care of overhead and to be used for the construction and maintennace of purely state aid projects.

"This will give the highway department $13,350,000, a sum in excess of what the chairman said would be sufficient to complete the roads in six years. Captain Barnett's position seems to indicate that he thinks that this tag tax of $5,000,000 belongs to the state highway department or that they have a lien on it. They got it like all other departments get their allotment, by the grace of the people. The people of Georgia pay this money and it belongs to them. Georgia's revenue is raised from many sources: Farmers, laboring men, professional taxes, income taxes, sales taxes, nuisance taxes, gas tax, tag tax and many other sources not necessary to mention. When this money is covered into the treasury it belongs to the people of Georgia and they have a right to allot it where it is most needed.

"The common schools of this state, the insane asylum at Milledgeville, the old Confederate veterans, the stricken at Alto and our university system are just as important and sacred to the people of Georgia as their roads. The people want good roads, but they want their children educated, their veterans cared for and their afflicted provided for. All of this money from whatever source it comes belongs to the people and they alone have the right to say to which one of its departments any part or all of it shall be allocated. If such a thing could exist that the schools and other institutions mentioned could comfortably get along and spare a little money when we had no roads at all, wouldn't it be the part of wisdom to allocate temporarily to roads, provided the schools and other institutions could move on, though not quite so efficiently? It is silly to say that when you take a sum that the people allocate to the highway department and allocate it to another of the people's departments that it is borrowing from Peter to pay Paul. It is simply the people taking their own money from one department and transferring it to another. Men and women who pay these taxes of every kind, including the tag tax at the same time have children in school, relatives and friends who are Confederate veterans and widows of veterans, and they and they alone have the right to say which of its departments it shall go to.

Intended to Aid Opponent.

"In view of the only issue in this campaign is the remedy I advocate, and which is the only remedy offered by a candidate for the deplorable condition existing in this state, a simple-minded child reading Captain Barnett's statement of August 18 could not err but would know that the statement is nothing more or less than a political card intended as an argument against this issue and in favor of one of the candidates for governor. This candidate for governor could not himself have prepared a shrewder or more misleading political card than that of Captain Barnett, of August 18, 1930. Captain Barnett said any official or employe of the highway department playing politics would be fired. Who's going to fire the chairman for this political card that he issued? Furthermore, it is common knowlelge that more than 90 per cent of the employes of the highway department are today going up and down this state spending practically all of their time in political activities and spreading political propaganda for one of the candidates for governor and not one of them has been fired.

"Let Captain Barnett keep his promise. If he does not know of this political activity of his employes, then he lacks sufficient intelligence to hold his job. All in the world that has been advocated is that for one year only the money paid into the treasury by the people of Georgia for tag tax be used for the benefit of the people for a single year in paying their just and honest debts to the schools, their veterans, their insane and the Alto sanitarium.

"And this can be done and leave more for road construction and maintenance than John N. Holder ever spent on roads in any one year and without burdening the people with an increase in taxes or a decrease in appropriations to their schools, veterans, etc. In spite of all the hullabaloo by the highway department, we are content to submit this issue to the people of Georgia.

"GEO. H. CARSWELL."

RIVERS REITERATES PLANKS OF PLATFORM

Holds That as Result of New Taxes State Is Entirely Solvent.

Former State Senator E. D. Rivers, candidate for governor, in a statement issued Saturday, reiterates his belief that the new income and sales taxes have made the state government "entirely solvent" and that by reasonable economy all back due debts can be paid within a few years.

Rivers outlines his previously announced platform in the statement, which is, in part, as follows:

"With the approach of the gubernatorial primary, I believe it fitting to again submit to the people a statement of the principles for which I stand.

"I am in favor of free school books for all children in the state.

"The 5 mill tax on farm lands for state purposes should be removed because the farmer is already overburdened and is taxed on land which is nonproductive.

"Automobile license tags should be distributed through county officials because of the greater convenience to our citizens throughout the state and the wider distribution of the money collected, while not costing the tag buyer any more than at present.

"I favor reduction of the 80 odd departments in the state capitol to 14 and the elimination of useless employes for both retrenchment and efficiency. The present machinery of our state government is cumbersome, overlapping, expensive and obsolete. With 14 departments, namely: agriculture, audits, conservation, corporations, education, eleemosynary, finance, health, and hygiene, highways, law, labor and industry, penal and corrective, state and treasury, the state can be run more efficiently and save the taxpayers over a million dollars per year.

"All of our schools should be kept open a full term of nine months and teachers promptly paid.

"Pensions should be paid our Confederate veterans in full as authorized by the legislature, and in monthly cash payments.

Highway Sinking Fund.

"Highway construction by the 'county matching' plan should be abolished and a sinking fund established to repay counties that have matched. Income from the gasoline tax, license tags and federal aid is ample to build our roads and without bonds or debentures.

"Power to veto damaging legislation, granted to the governor, should be firmly used when necessary. The present accumulated debts would not exist had Governor Hardman vetoed legislation which voted appropriations without providing for their payment.

"An immediate measure upon my inauguration, if elected, will be to pay every cent available under the law for the relief of our state institutions—chiefly the asylum for the insane, who are in direct need.

"I am unalterably opposed to commercial combines which oppress the masses of the people by lowering prices paid farmers for their crops and form monopolies to increase the cost of living for the working man. I will invoke the law now on the statute books of Georgia to prevent such combines and to protect the people.

"Right of the working man to organize and better his condition should be assured.

"I favor a complete tax revision and the establishment of a permanent tax system including a reasonable income tax and a readjusted corporation tax.

Debt Plans.

"In the discussion of how to pay Georgia's accumulated debts, initiated several weeks ago so disastrously by George Carswell, I advanced a plan by which the governor would be empowered at the general election in November, through constitutional amendment, to borrow sufficient money to pay our old soldiers, teachers and institutions by next January 1 and without issuing bonds or debentures.

"This plan required positive action on Governor Hardman's part which was not forthcoming and no other plan has been submitted by which it is possible to provide relief before 1932. What I now propose is to pay our old soldiers, teachers and institutions with all the money available in the treasury immediately after my induction into office and let some of the high-salaried officials and other appropriations wait for their money as our teachers, soldiers and institutions have done in the past.

"With the returns from the recent income tax and other taxes, Georgia is entirely solvent and a policy of even reasonable economy would put our state treasury on a sound basis and repay all back debts within a few years."

HOLDER FORCES ACCEPT CARSWELL GAUNTLET

Candidate Willing To Submit to People Proposition To Divert Highway Funds.

C. B. Allen, campaign manager for John N. Holder, in a statement issued Saturday accepts for his candidate the challenge of George H. Carswell to his opponents in the race for the governorship, that the chief issue be made the suggestion to divert to the state's debts the revenue received by the highway department from the sale of auto license tags.

The statement in full is as follows:

"An Atlanta newspaper carried a story a day or two ago in which mention was made of the value of highway construction in giving employment to labor. It was estimated that no less than 5,000 men were employed in this work in excess of the number employed at this period last year. At a time when so many are out of employment, building highways serves a double purpose. It is not only valuable in giving employment to labor, but it gives added traffic to railroads, now greatly in need of it, and to hundreds of truck drivers who transport the materials from side tracks to the points where they are being used on the highways. It means more business for merchants and more money in circulation generally.

"Our highway program is the one potent instrument remaining to sustain progress and to bridge over until the return of prosperity.

"How unfortunate that the highway program should be under attack at this time. The proposal by one of the candidates for governor to use highway funds in paying off accumulated indebtedness undermines employment, prosperity and progress. It penalizes the spirit of thrift and efficiency in the present highway department and breaks the morale of good roads enthusiasts all over the state. George Carswell, who first made this proposition to pay off our debts, should win the booby prize for suggesting the worst method of doing it.

Opponents' Responsibility.

"I call attention to Mr. Carswell's connection with this present indebtedness. Remember that in 1926, after making the race for governor himself, he threw his strength to Dr. Hardman and made it possible for him to be elected.

"Mr. Carswell became, naturally, one of the principal advisors of the present administration. This state indebtedness dates back to 1927 when an appropriation bill was passed that was far in excess of any prospects of revenue. The governor was advised to veto the bill. Mr. Carswell, who at that time was the prince of his eunuchs, must have been consulted. Anyway, there was no veto and the debt was foisted upon the state.

"Responsibility for this indebtedness is attached to another candidate in this race—the Hon. R. B. Russell, Jr. Mr. Russell was the switchman on the job when the wreck occurred. He saw the bill coming and knew its consequences. At that high moment of opportunity and responsibility, he did a weak and bad thing. When he had it in his power to cast the deciding vote for or against the bill—when it was possible for him to save the credit and good name of the state—he surrendered to those who were railroading an excessive appropriation bill, cast his vote for it and made it possible for it to become a law. He thus voted for extravagance, for debt, for embarrassment to schools and other consequences.

Mr. Russell has a plan for paying off the state's debts, but a pilot who guided the ship of state on the rocks can hardly be trusted to take it safely into port.

"Mr. Russell is at this time going over the state with school books under his arm and telling the people how he intends to save them money in the purchase of school books. That is very fine—that is, Mr. Russell, the candidate. Russell, the legislator, looks like a different person. I have not been snooping on him, but Jim Perry, who seems to be using the house journal as a text book in this campaign, says that Russell ducked in 1924 when he was a member of the house of representatives and the Guess text book bill came up for a vote. Mr. Russell reminds me of the lines from Deborah: "Curse me Meroz because they that came not up to the help of Jehovah against the mighty." When the heavily burdened school book buyers of this state finally got their fight for relief before the legislature of which Mr. Russell was a member, the name of "Russell of Barrow" was called but there was no answer. For Mr. Perry tells he was at the capitol that day because he voted for an appropriation that passed on that day. According to my information Mr. Russell has a clear record in one respect, he voted for all the appropriations.

"We have seen Dick as a legislator and we now see him as a candidate but with what certainty can we guess what he would do as governor? The schoolbook issue is a good one for this campaign but like many other meritorious issues it is being submerged.

Accepts Challenge.

"The one persistent thing that the people of the state, who finally make the issues, are talking about is the scheme to ransack the highway treasury to pay off the debts that have accumulated through the last four years. Mr. Carswell is responsible for the issue of whether or not we shall hi-jack the highway department—whether or not we shall throw men out of jobs; whether or not we shall further postpone the completion of our highways; whether or not we shall embarrass the present fine working highway board; whether or not we shall form the habit of dribbling out highway money for every purpose until the bond advocates have the opportunity to say as they have said in the past that the pay-as-you-go plan is a failure and that the only way to build highways is to sell bonds.

"The issue is whether or not politicians who have forced this debt upon us shall plunge their cadaverous hands into the highway treasury and cover up the consequences of a wild orgy of spending and their clumsy system of handling state funds. As long as this proposition is urged, no other issue has a chance.

"John Holder, lifetime advocate of good roads and more interested now than ever in our great highway program, accepts the challenge of Mr. Carswell. He stands flat-footed and unmovable in his opposition to diverting highway money to any other cause now or in the future. He is carrying on the fight of the most heavily taxed people in our state—he is making common cause with those who have waited and waited for highways and at last feel that they see them in sight. He is fighting the battle of the small car owner—who is legion, upon whom a heavy license tax is levied with the pledge that the money collected from the tags will be devoted to building roads. He is ready to submit the issue to the people. He will submit it with perfect confidence."

Say Holder Tide Rising.

Another statement given out Saturday from Holder headquarters declares: "The rising tide of the Holder sentiment was more evident this week than any week of the campaign.

"The enthusiastic spirit of the Holder supporters was well exemplified by the visit of more than 200 of the candidate's fellow citizens of Jackson county to the Holder headquarters Friday afternoon. These were neighbors and lifelong friends of Mr. Holder's who came to announce their readiness to lay aside their own work and take up the fight for the remaining days of the campaign in any part of the state to which they might be assigned."

Holder at Carrollton.

CARROLLTON, Ga., Aug. 23.—(Special.)—John N. Holder, candidate for governor, delivered an address here this afternoon in which he outlined the planks of his platform and paid his respects to his opponents. He was especially severe in his criticism of George H. Carswell and Richard B. Russell, Jr., who he said were largely responsible for the present debts of the state government.

Harris Denies Slaton Claim Of Watson Following Support

Charges "Attempt To Deceive the People Which Cannot Be Justified."

Strenuous denial that the leaders of the Watson following in Georgia are supporting former Governor Slaton, is contained in a statement issued Saturday by Senator William J. Harris, who declares that "this attempt to deceive the people cannot be justified."

Senator Harris includes in his statement letters from a brother and a nephew of Senator Watson, pledging their support and telling of the warm relation which they knew existed between Watson and Harris.

Charges that typewriters were sent from Washington to the Harris headquarters in Atlanta under government frank, are also denied in a statement from the Harris headquarters.

In a second statement issued Saturday by the headquarters reference is again made to a visit from the United States senate committee charged with investigating campaign expenses, and declares his headquarters are being flooded with letters from all over the state indicating that a large sum of money will be spent by the Slaton managers.

The statements in part are as follows:

"Ex-Governor Slaton seeing his certain defeat on September 10 has desperately grabbed at every straw. Last Tuesday in his speech at Dallas he is quoted in the press as saying 'Practically all of the leaders of the late Senator Thomas E. Watson are likewise supporting me. It will be recalled that Senator Watson played a conspicuous part in helping to put through the disfranchisement program.'

"Of all men in Georgia ex-Governor Slaton is the last one to have brought into this campaign this reference to the late Senator Watson. When Slaton was in the legislature and the proposed disfranchisement of the negro was before the house, Slaton opposed the measure to his limit and finally voted to reject it. Senator Watson was then fighting aggressively for that disfranchisement measure and Slaton antagonized Watson to the last.

"What does ex-Governor Slaton mean by 'practically all leaders of the late Senator Watson are likewise supporting me (Slaton)'? Will Slaton name these alleged leaders of Senator Watson? He certainly knows that not one man in 100 followers of the late Senator Thomas E. Watson in Georgia are now supporting Slaton in this race. On the other hand, they are actively supporting me everywhere.

Senator Watson's closest surviving relatives are his only living brother and a favorite nephew—Hon. William A. Watson, of Thomson, and Mr. A. D. Watson, of Louisville. I have in my possession letters from of them, one dated July 12 and the other August 9, 1930, assuring me of their support.

Who has the best right to know the mind of former Senator Watson, these closest relatives living or Candidate Slaton now running for office, presuming to tell the mind and preference of the dead senator? There has never been a more outrageous insult to the memory of Thomas E. Watson and his real friends and followers than the effort of Mr. Slaton to bring the ex-senator into this campaign, and now tell the people the mind of Senator Watson if he were livingtoday. This attempt to deceive the people cannot be justified. These surviving relatives of the late senator knew Mr. Watson's feelings concerning me and his views against ex-Governor Slaton. If anyone wishes to verify the mind of Thomas E. Watson about John M. Slaton, let the friends and followers of the late senator review the Jeffersonian and other Watson publications. Numberless editorials expressing most forcibly the mind of Mr. Watson will show clearly his repudiation and denunciation of the record of Governor Slaton.

"Indeed, if Senator Watson could view this contest for senator he would turn over in his grave to protest against such misrepresentations of his mind and soul concerning John M. Slaton. The family, relatives and friends of the late senator know that my relations were most cordial in every way with Mr. Watson while we were colleagues in the senate, and Mr. Watson stated repeatedly to his friends and followers that no senator worked harder for the common people than Senator Harris.'

"Everywhere in every county the friends of Mr. Watson are supporting me practically 100 per cent, and no amount of attempted deception by Slaton can induce these patriotic Georgians to vote for him. This is a typical instance of his attempted deception of the people on many things that he brought into this campaign."

Headquarters Statements.

The statements issued by the Harris headquarters Saturday are, in part, as follows:

"Ex-Governor Slaton in his various speeches over the state is endeavoring to prejudice the mind of the public in Georgia against the probe which is certainly coming through the senate investigating committe to go into the expenditure of my headquarters and that of Mr. Slaton. He makes a great flourish about this committee coming down south 'to interfere with our white primaries in Georgia' and shows that he fears this revelation when he and his paid campaign managers and workers are put on the stand under oath showing where the money came from and how it was expended.

"Only within the past few weeks this committee has come into the expenditure in the Illinois primary, where Mrs. McCormick admitted she spent personally $355,000 and through her friends there was spent a half million dollars.

"No wonder Mr. Slaton is scared. Every man who contributed a dollar to his campaign fund or received money of any amount—the names and amounts will be put in the record and published.

"Senator Harris has in his possession letters from Georgians while he was in Washington, even before Mr. Slaton or Senator Harris entered the race formally, such letters declaring that Mr. Slaton was going to spend $100,000 in this campaign. These meager figures were just a "starter." It has been repeatedly said in the capital of the state of Georgia that Mr. Slaton's campaign chest would use $250,000, 'if it would only send him to the senate.'

We have in the possession of the Harris headquarters a letter indicating the accuracy of these predictions.

Typewriters Not Franked.

In the daily press of August 21, under date line from Macon, Ga., former Governor Slaton is quoted as charging Senator William J. Harris as "having had three typewriters franked from Washington to his headquarters in Atlanta." This statement is in line with the reckless, unfounded and false assertions by Mr. Slaton repeated during this campaign on the stump and in his campaign literature.

This is so rank and untrue and unfair to the senator that we feel a simple statement of the facts should be made. Just before leaving Washington for Atlanta to open headquarters for his campaign, Senator Harris had expressed two typewriters to Atlanta over the Railway Express Company addressed to the Ansley hotel. On delivery by the express company of the typewriters, the Ansley hotel paid the charges, $4.01. Senator Harris has the receipted bill from the express company and the hotel embracing this item.

Committee Predicts Collins' Nomination

FAIRBURN, Ga., Aug. 23.—(Special.)—L. L. Perry, acting for the campaign committee of M. D. Collins, of Fairburn, who is a candidate for state superintendent of schools, today issued a statement which in part is as follows:

"Mr. Collins is conducting a very active campaign for this state office, having visited in one hundred and twenty counties and having spoken upwards of 50 times. The campaign committee reports that there is now every indication that Mr. Collins will sweep the state in the September primary.

"In his address at Newington last night, Mr. Collins expressed himself as favoring fewer changes in textbooks in our public schools as well as a uniform textbook law, free of jokers, which will require every county to use the same kind of textbooks, so that when a man moves from one county to another, he will not have to purchase another set of new books for his children.

"Mr. Collins favors a more rigid economy within the state department of education. He emphasized his hearty favor of the equalization fund and a more definite and systematic plan of the distribution of same."

One Tag Per Car Favored by Wilson

In a statement issued Saturday, N. N. Hughes, campaign manager for John Wilson, candidate for secretary of state, after reviewing the assurances of support being received, comments on the state's auto tag system as follows:

"We are receiving numerous requests from citizens, including members of the legislature, on the question of going back to the one auto tag system. From my own experience as an officer, I know that there are numerous violations of the law in buying two tags for one car and using them on two cars. In the use of one license plate from ten to twelve thousand dollars can be saved annually in the manufacture of plates and revenue will probably increase many thousands of dollars. John Wilson will co-operate fully with the legislature with a view of cutting expenses and at the same time increasing revenue."

POLITICIANS ON RUN, IS CLAIM OF PERRY

Reiterates Predictions of Political Money Debauch in Last Week of Race.

DOUGLASVILLE, Ga., Aug. 23. (Special.)—James A. Perry, candidate for governor, spoke in the courthouse here this afternoon.

"I entered this fight as a representative of the whole people," he declared, "and only after I was convinced that no one would be in this race, as has proven true, except the usual type who want the office to gratify a personal ambition, if not worse, to commercialize the next administration.

"We have evidence of the uses of big money in this campaign. We know where John Holder's money is coming from and we know how it is to be returned; we know where George Carswell's campaign money is coming from, and we know how this is to be returned.

"We find Carl Davie, the noted bank liquidating attorney, who has harvested a big fortune at the expense of the depositors and stockholders of banks that have been forced to the wall during the past ten years, who is backing Ed Rivers, and for no purpose except to cash in.

"We have the scars and disgraces of Mr. Russell's harmonious legislative career, of which he now proudly boasts, with all of its unpaid appropriations, and which came about by his one vote; otherwise it would have been defeated. We have the $26,000,000 that his harmonious legislative record has put on the backs of the people of this state during the last ten years.

"Frankly, Mr. Russell has only a small following in a very few counties in this state. I will carry the county he lives in, simply because 60 per cent of the territory comprising his county comes from Walton and Gwinnett counties where my people have lived for more than a hundred years and where acquaintances of two generations are actively supporting me throughout this portion of Barrow county. He has at last joined forces with the insidious propaganda, financed by big money and running dozens of automobiles over the state in a whispering campaign that Perry has no chance to win.

"Mr. Russell is spending a far greater amount of money in his race than he has sought to impress the people he is spending. My compensation for the physical efforts, with the sole expense of articles appearing in the weekly and daily papers of the state, no letter writing campaign, is now being rewarded by an uprising of the masses throughout the state. They have accepted my sincere efforts as being the only campaign conducted looking to real relief from the disgraceful conditions that politics, of the type of my four opponents and cheap politics, have brought us to. The time is here for the people to look to qualifications and not line up on either side of the factional fight in the different counties over this state. This I am convinced is being done and I predict that the people will win their fight, under my leadership, by an overwhelming majority, on the 10th day of September. There hasn't been a race in this state in 40 years that has cost as little as my campaign, and yet, due to the fight I am making for the people, it is going to be proven that a man of limited means can yet be elected governor in this state. Until this is done the people need expect no relief.

"All over the state, where I have been speaking the past two weeks, I am met with this information on arriving at my different speaking dates: 'The masses here have organized to carry our county for you; the politicians are against you; money has already been sent here to buy the county, but the people are determined that this disgrace shall not be carried out.' My original plan to give us school books at cost, do away with political offices and bureaus and run our government along the lines of the same economic and conservative judgment that private business is conducted, is going to prove a great victory for the people.

"Again I say there will be more political money spent in debauch during the last ten days of this campaign than has been spent in all gubernatorial campaigns in Georgia during the last 25 years."

Running on Record, Says Carl Guess

Carl N. Guess, candidate for secretary of state, in a card issued Saturday deplored the injection of the American Legion into the race, saying:

"I am a veteran of the Spanish-American War and voluntarily registered for service in the World War, but I am not running because of that, nor because my son is a member of the Legion and I am a Baptist, other members of my family Presbyterians, nor because I am a member of some noble fraternal orders, but strictly by reason of service rendered to the people of Georgia in the past."

Mr. Guess then reviews his efforts to secure passage when he was a member of the legislature of his bill to create a state school book board. The bill was passed by the house and then, says the statement, was "killed dead as a hammer in the senate committee on education and public schools, of which one of my opponents, Mr. Moore, was a member. What I would like to know is why my bill was killed in the senate committee when under its provisions $1,500 would have compensated for all the information we have been clamoring for on the issue between the school book trust and the people of Georgia.

"As in my previous statements bringing to the attention legislation in which I was interested, the house journal will verify every statement I have made."

Speer's Committee Assured by Voters

The committee forwarding the candidacy of State Treasurer Speer for renomination Saturday issued a statement, and declared it is fairly flooded with letters from leaders of business, farming, labor and other interests in all parts of the state, assuring him of the strong support he will have in their sections.

"They particularly stress," the statement says, "that they see no reason to wish for a change in the administration Captain Speer has given to their state treasury for so many years. It has been flawless and so pronounced by governors, auditors and legislative committees. The common expression is of unbounded confidence in the fidelity of this old Confederate veteran whose services to the state in war and peace have always been loyal and correct.

"The promise of the hundreds of writers is that he will receive a handsome majority in the primary as usual."

Slaton Is Certain Winner, Predicts Campaign Manager

Hall Declares That Senator Harris Now Presents Pathetic Figure.

Hewlett A. Hall, campaign manager for John M. Slaton, predicted the former governor's overwhelming nomination on September 10, in a statement issued Saturday.

He also says that Senator Harris now presents a "pathetic figure" and is "desperate and frantic."

The statement is as follows:

"We have not attempted to inflate the strength of Governor Slaton's candidacy by extravagant predictions. A candidate who requires to be pumped up with boast and bombast in the outset of his effort is an empty wind bag. We wish to assure our friends that the election of Governor Slaton on September 10 is a certainty beyond question. We have not made this prediction heretofore. We have been content for Governor Slaton to go before the people and make his own race. This he has done, from the mountains to the sea. By the day of the primary, everybody in Georgia who is interested will have heard him.

"Governor Slaton will be elected to the senate. Of that we have no doubt whatever. The only question now left in the situation is the size of his majority. He started the campaign as a very strong candidate, by reason of his ability, his character and his courage. He has gained consistently from week to week. If he continues to gain at the rate he is now gaining, he will carry not less than one hundred and thirty-five counties.

"Slaton headquarters are swarming with prominent citizens in all walks of life who come to bring the news of his growing strength in their respective localities. Headquarters are deluged with letters that bring the same enthusiastic and convincing reports.

"Harris headquarters are as quiet as a graveyard. The campaign manager for Senator Harris, a splendid Georgian better qualified in every way than Senator Harris to represent Georgia in that great forum, is a sad and lonely figure. He stands before a window in the Piedmont hotel, gazing out across the landscape, and undoubtedly asks himself the question: 'How did I ever get inveigled into this job of trying to make a lame duck fly?'

"Pathetic Figure."

"As for Senator Harris, he presents a pathetic picture. He cannot debate with Governor Slaton, on one excuse or another. He cannot debate with any fellow senator on any question. He is so nervous and uneasy that he cannot make a speech on the stump without fumbling his notes. He cannot face the microphone in a radio address without trembling and halting. He is desperate and frantic. He seizes upon anything that floats within his reach.

"He started his campaign by claiming he would carry 161 of the 161 counties of Georgia. Then, when he realized how absurd was that claim, he set up a cry about Slaton money. It being better poltics to cry early than late, he commenced to cry early. He started by claiming the press of Georgia were a 'unit' for him. Then, when he found more newspapers opposing him than suporting him, he charged that Slaton had 'bought up the press.' The senator has paid both the press and the people of Georgia a very high compliment. He charges that both are open to be bought with money.

"He goes to Milton county and tells the people that if re-elected he will make every creek in that county navigable to motor boats and yachts. He goes to other counties and hands out similar cheap and clap-trap appeals. But he makes no mention of his headlong extravagance on the senate appropriations committee, which has resulted in high taxes and hard times. He makes no mention of his vote to enter the League of Nations without reservation. He makes no mention of his recent reversal of his position on the League. He makes no mention of the challenge given him by Governor Slaton to tell the people how he will vote on entering the World Court, the back door entrance into the League, when that question comes before him at the next reconvening of congress.

"Senator Harris falsifies the record of how southern senators voted on Judge Parker's confirmation. He adroitly sidesteps Bishop Candler's declaration that governmental extravagance and high taxes are responsible for hard times. He is silent in the matter of misusing his senatorial frank to save postage on his political campaign letters and literature. He cries out for a republican investigation of the forthcoming democratic white primary, well knowing that the republican party would welcome an opportunity to overthrow white supremacy in the south. Yet he is silent on the fact that Georgia laws are adequate and sufficient to punish corrupt practices in Georgia primaries, if any are committed.

"In the final analysis, it comes down to this—whether Georgians want a real senator in the senate alongside of Senator George. They have had abundant opportunity to ponder this question and estimate the character, the ability, the courage and the all-round fitness of the two candidates. Their verdict on September 10 beyond any question will be the overwhelming election of Slaton.

Slaton at Milledgeville.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., Aug. 23. (Special.)—Closing tonight another strenuous week of stump speaking, former Governor John M. Slaton, in his address here reiterated and emphasized his demand for Senator William J. Harris to "make clear his position on the World Court."

"In my radio address last Monday evening," the speaker said, "after thus making clear my position, I requested Senator Harris to state definitely, in his radio address last Wednesday evening, just where he stands upon this question.

"Senator Harris said nothing in his radio address about the World Court. He has spoken several times on the stump this week, and in none of those speeches did he utter a syllable about the World Court."

Answer Is Made To Henslee Card

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.

The headquarters of former Governor John M. Slaton, candidate for the United States senate, today replied to a statement issued yesterday by A. H. Henslee, candidate for secretary of state, in which Mr. Henslee criticized Mr. Slaton for commuting the sentence of Leo Frank.

The statement from Slaton headquarters said:

"This man Henslee has been a candidate several times for various state house offices. Each time his platform has consisted of the fact that he was a member of the jury that tried Leo M. Frank. Each time he has been overwhelmingly defeated. . . ."

RUSSELL SAYS HOLDER USES RIVERS AS TOOL

Criticises Holder's Consistency in Now Turning on Rival Candidate

GAINESVILLE, Ga., Aug. 23.—(Special.)—Richard B. Russell, Jr., speaker of the house of representatives and candidate for governor, in a speech here today declared that his fight for schoolbooks at cost "is bearing fruit" and has caused Mr. Holder to "come to the mourners' bench."

"It now develops that I wrought better than I knew," said Mr. Russell, "for after running for governor as long as most people can remember and never having in any of his numerous and unsuccessful campaigns raised his hand against this iniquitous trust, he, for the first time, this week demands that school books be provided at cost.

"The voters realize this pretext of conversion is only done for expediency. Mr. Holder's constancy has nas never been his strong point. This can best be substantiated by Mr. Rivers, who was used by Mr. Holder as a tool to tie up the legislature in defiance of all principles of democratic government that Mr. Holder might homestead on the highway chairmanship.

"Mr. Holder turns on Mr. Rivers in this campaign and attacks him for not being sincere in advocating a reorganization of the state government. Mr. Rivers is guilty but Mr. Holder, being the beneficiary, can in poor grace sentence him.

"Georgia will never elect as governor a man who places his personal ambitions above the welfare of his state and who has shown that he will use any means in his efforts to harass his successful adversary despite the cost to the people."

Mr. Russell directed his shafts at other candidates also, saying:

"Mr. Perry in his desperate efforts to get into the race, is making a deliberate attempt to mislead the people by claiming that I dodged a vote on a bill to furnish school books at cost. This is a bald deception, as anyone can see by reading the substitute for House Bill No. 630, House Journal of 1924, which merely provided for appointment of a commission to investigate the feasibility of such a plan. If anyone was for Mr. Perry, he would turn against him after reading this bill and seeing how he is trying to deceive them.

"Mr. Perry's enmity against me is really due to the fact that I have never dodged a vote on the many bills he has had introduced which provided for increases in his salary. I voted against every one of them.

"The school book bill would have passed the last session but for the lobbying activities of Mr. Carswell's supporters. I mention Mr. Carswell's campaign with reverence, as one should do in speaking of the dead, for his supporters have dwindled till there are few left besides friends of the school book trust. When my fight on this trust is ended, these friends will be so few in number they will be hardly enough to tally."

Committee Claims Strength.

WINDER, Ga., Aug. 23.—(Special.)—The local offices of Richard B. Russell, Jr., candidate for governor, Saturday issued the following statement of the indicated status of Mr. Russell's campaign:

"The unprecedented growth in strength which has characterized Mr. Russell's campaign has continued during the past week. He presented the issues of his platform and continued his fight against factionalism and political jobbery before the voters of 15 counties. His speeches have been enthusiastically received by large audiences and the people have centered on his candidacy as the best hope of bringing needed relief from present conditions.

"He is more firmly entrenched as the leading candidate over the state as a whole.

"Thinking people realize that the greatest need of Georgia today is an administration of harmony and accord between the governor and the general assembly. They know that plans, platforms and promises amount to nothing unless the governor can secure the co-operation of the legislature in putting them into effect.

"It is conceded that Mr. Russell has the confidence of the legislature and the ability to work in harmony with the general assembly, unhampered by factional fights—something that no other candidate possesses. This is one reason why a large majority of the voters are rallying to his support.

"Mr. Russell has no elaborate Atlanta headquarters, from which hirelings are hastening to scatter propaganda. The people have taken his fight into their own hnds and are going to elect him.

"The voters have had previous opportunities to elect three of his opponents, but have declined the offer."

Looming Air Mail Contracts Realigning Flying Interests

Transport Companies Merge To Obtain Opportunity To Secure 2 New Transcontinental Routes

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(UN) Enlargement of the nation's air mail facilities through establishment of two new transcontinental routes, bids on which will be opened Monday at the postoffice department, has brought important readjustments in the American air transport business.

A remarkable series of hurried merger moves occurred during the closing hours of the bidding period, indicating the anxiety of airway operators to be connected with the government in the country's program of expanded business through the air.

The new transcontinental lines will have eastern terminals at New York and Atlanta, Ga., and each will extend to Los Angeles, Cal. In the merger activities long-established passenger-carrying air lines sought to qualify for the air mail contracts under postal regulations.

The department's ruling that all bidders must have at least six months' experience flying a minimum of 250 miles at night eliminated some companies desiring to bid and led directly to the merger of Erle P. Halliburton's Southwest Air Fast Express with American Airways, of the Aviation Corporation. The merger was agreed to at 4 a. m. today in New York.

The new company, which probably will be known as the Southern All-Weather Transcontinental, will be eligible to bid and may obtain the Atlanta-Los Angeles contract. Halliburton's company would not have been eligible because it alone did not meet the night flying requirements.

Halliburton, chairman of the new company, and Frederick G. Coburn, president, who represents American Airways in the company, agreed that either could buy out the other within nine months for $1,400,000.

United States Airways, operating between Denver and Kansas City, is understood to have merged with Pittsburgh Airways, and the Ohio Air Transport Company to form a $2,000,000 concern. United States Airways, like Halliburton's company, was barred from bidding by the night flying stipulation, but as party to the reported merger would be able to bid.

The southern transcontinental route will be via Birmingham, Dallas, Fort Worth, El Paso and New Mexico and Arizona points to be designated later to Los Angeles.

The northern route from New York will be via Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Amarillo, Albuquerque to Los Angeles.

ROAD DEPARTMENT IN POLITICS, CHARGE

his recent prediction that the last 10 days of the primary race will see huge sums turned loose by candidates and their backers.

"Again I say," he declared, "there will be more political money spent in debauch during the last 10 days of this campaign than has been spent in all gubernatorial campaigns in Georgia in the last 25 years." The speaker expressed his confidence, however, that such an outpouring of political funds would have no effect on the voters, and declared his belief that he would win.

Warmth in Senate Race.

Senator William J. Harris, in a vigorous card Saturday, made strenuous denial of the recent claim of former Governor Slaton that he was being supported by the leaders of the former Watson following.

"Of all the men in Georgia, ex-Governor Slaton is the last one to have brought into this campaign this reference to the late Senator Watson," Harris declares. "When Slaton was in the legislature and the proposed disfranchisement of the negro was before the house, he opposed it to his limit and voted against it. Senator Watson was then fighting aggressively for it, and Slaton antagonized Watson to the last.

"There has never been a more outrageous insult to the memory of Thomas E. Watson and his real friends than this effort to bring the ex-senator into the campaign. This attempt to deceive the people cannot be justified."

Slaton Forces Confident.

Confident prediction of the nomination to the senate of former Governor John M. Slaton is contained in a statement issued Saturday by Hewlett A. Hall, his campaign manager.

"The election of Governor Slaton is a certainty beyond question," the statement reads. "If he continues to gain at the rate he is now going he will carry not less than 135 counties.

"While Slaton headquarters are swarming with prominent citizens the Harris headquarters are as quiet as a graveyard, and his campaign manager stands before a window, gazing out over the landscape, and undoubtedly asking himself the question: 'How did I ever get inveigled into this job of trying to make a lame duck fly?'

"As for Senator Harris, he is desperate and frantic, and presents a pathetic figure."

SCHOOL CHARTER PLANS REVISED

taxes levied by the borough government, and transfer of that reduced sum to the school board, which would have power to levy and collect its taxes.

Under one of the Gaines plans, city taxes would be 75 cents per $100 and the school board would have authority to levy a tax not exceeding $1.25 per $100. This, it has been pointed out, would provide ample revenue for the schools and for the borough government, in that it would provide a tax increase of 50 cents per $100 valuation on real and personal property.

When the matter was before a similar committee before, it was pointed out by representatives of council and the administration that this 75-cent levy for the local government would be insufficient unless the school board took over payment of the interest and sinking fund on outstanding school bonds amounting to about $500,000 annually.

Chief objection to the plan, raised at the previous conference, is the natural aversion of Atlantans to having taxes increased. At the same time officials of the school system pointed out that any sum less than the $1.25 per $100 valuation would furnish an insufficient amount of revenue to carry school bonds.

If the proposed change were authorized, the school department would have authority to levy the tax, and the tax collector of the city of Atlanta would be forced to keep school funds intact. It also would be vested with power to float and retire its own school bonds and to expend all monies it received without the sanction of the mayor, council or any other body.

Mr. Gaines feels that the committee as a committee or the board of education as such, should make no recommendation without round table discussions of the financial problem of the board with outstanding Atlantans "who have the interest of the children and their education uppermost."

One of the duties of the special committee from the board is to attempt to raise enough revenue to "prevent embarrassment of the school system through lack of finances" and also to sponsor legislation looking towards the "best interests of the school system."

Thus far, the committee has shunned the responsibility in so far as recommendation of any changes in the charter are concerned, and have indicated that they will approach the matter with the greatest tact possible.

"I feel that the citizens' committee would be an important and almost necessary factor in evolution of any plan of relief," Mr. Gaines said. "I, therefore, shall recommend that it be re-established, or that another be set up to assist in working out our problem.

"No matter what plan we finally devise, the citizens of Atlanta must favor it or it cannot become effective or become a law. I believe that Atlantans are interested in the education of their children and that they want the best possible educational opportunities for them. If these public-spirited citizens study the question they will come to the same conclusion that we have reached, that a system of education such as Atlanta should provide cannot be furnished on the 26 per cent of the revenue of the city as now provided by the charter with a tax rate of $1.50 per $100 valuation."

Members of the board committee will hold another session at 1:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, at which time Mr. Gaines is expected to voice his views on the matter.

Among the other duties of the committee was one charging them to interview the dozen candidates for the three posts in the Georgia legislature from Fulton county regarding their disposition as to legislation affecting the Atlanta school system.

Both Mr. Sweat and Mr. Gaines stated Saturday that they have refrained from discussing any concrete measure with them pending outcome of the projected conference studies.

"We feel that we should be able to present something concrete when we do ask for something," they declared.

this meeting you will be furnished with full power to proceed with this work at the earliest possible date, as we are interested in getting a new postoffice for Atlanta and are endeavoring in every way possible to assist."

First Formal Notice.

Although agreement on the selection of the site for Atlanta's new postoffice had been reached some months ago, the first notice of formal acceptance of the site offer was disclosed in the communication just received by Mayor Ragsdale from Ferry K. Heath, assistant secretary of treasury.

Heath's letter read:

"The department has accepted the proposal of Messrs. J. H. Taylor & Son, agents, for the sale of property at the corner of Hunter and Spring streets as the site for the new postoffice in Atlanta, Ga. This acceptance is upon the condition that the government be granted the right by the city to construct, maintain, repair and exclusively use a tunnel to extend between the Terminal depot and the proposed site.

"In view of the assurances given the treasury department that this privilege would be granted in the event the government accepts this site, the department would greatly appreciate the necessary steps being taken to grand said privilege."

Two Refuse Offers.

The Taylor offer accepted by the treasury for the $2,500,000 federal structure comprises 15 separately owned parcels. The owners of all but two of these are said to have accepted the government's offer, while acquisition of the site will not be forestalled by the owners holding out, officials explained.

Except for the Mitchell street frontage, the site occupies the entire block bounded by Forsyth, Hunter, Spring and Mitchell. The frontage along Hunter is 426 feet, with the property extending 300 feet south along Spring toward Mitchell and 250 feet on along Forsyth toward Mitchell. Cutting of a new street on the south end of the site is proposed to give street frontage to the postoffice on all sides.

YORK WILL BE VETERANS' GUEST

their guns and poured a hail of bullets into the bottom of the ravine. All of the non-commissioned officers were killed or seriously wounded except Corporal Alvin C. York, of Pall Mall, Tenn.

"With Corporal York were seven privates, four of whom were mostly occupied in covering with their rifles the large group of German infantrymen who had thrown down their arms at the first surprise. A few shots were fired by the remaining three Americans, but the chief burden of initiative and achievement fell upon Corporal York.

"Crouching close to the huddle of German prisoners, he engaged in a rapid-fire action with the machine gunners and infantrymen on the hillside. The return fire struck just behind him.

"Once a lieutenant on the hillside led a counter-attack of a dozen gunners and infantrymen against this extraordinary marksman, who shot the lieutenant through the stomach and killed others before the survivors took cover. German morale gave way entirely and the battalion commander surrendered his command.

"Corporal York placed himself between two German officers at the head of the column and distributed the seven Americans on guard along the flanks and in the rear of the hastily formed column of prisoners. On his way back over the hill he picked up a considerable number of prisoners from the north and northeast slopes of the hill. When he reported at the battalion P. C. Lieutenant Woods, the battalion adjutant, 328th infantry, counted the prisoners and found they totaled three officers and 129 enlisted men.

"After the armistice, Corporal York received the personal thanks of Major General Duncan, the division commander; Major General Summerall, commanding the Fifth corps, and General Pershing, the commander in chief. He also was given the Congressional Medal of Honor and the Croix de Guerre."

Florida Republicans Denounce Democrats

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Aug. 23.—(AP)—The democratic party is charged with "misgovernment' in the Florida republican platform which will be taken into the general election next November.

A preamble to the platform released by the new state central committee declared that in 1928 the voters of Florida not only expressed emphatic disapproval of the national democratic party but "by an unprecedented vote declared their thorough disapproval of the disastrous consequences of the misgovernment by the democratic politicians and political machines in control of the economic and legislative policies of this state."

The platform charged that democrats have increased the tax burdens by 1,500 per cent during the last 15 years, whereas the population of the state has increased by only 100 per cent in that period. It condemned "multiplicity of offices, imposition and maintenance of the fee system, and present methods of arriving at valuation of real estate for tax purposes."

Twilight Sleep Employed In Birth of Royal Baby

:: LOOKS MORE LIKE MOTHER THAN DUKE OF YORK ::

LONDON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The Sunday Express today said that Great Britain's new royal princess, born Thursday night to the Duchess of York, at Glamis Castle, is a "twilight sleep" baby.

She has dark hair and dark blue eyes, and at birth weighed seven pounds and two ounces. Her stature was an inch below the average, measuring 18 1-4 inches.

Her features are said to be characteristic of her mother's family, and she is described as more of a "Bowes-Lyon baby than a royal baby."

Her name is still under discussion, with the choice believed at present to lie between Cecilia Victoria Margaret and Cecilia Victoria Anne. Scotsmen are clamoring for "Margaret."

The homely phrase in the official bulletin announcing the birth, which read, "both are doing fine," was inspired by the Earl of Strathmore, father of the duchess.

At first it had been written in more formal terms. When the earl read it he said in a broad Scot's accent to the physician, "They're baith daein fine, are they?"

"Yes," replied the physician, Sir Henry Simson, "they are both doing fine."

"Then let's say it that way," the earl suggested. "The Glamis folk know what that means."

Villagers Rejoice.

Remarkable scenes occurred at the village of Glamis as automobiles, charabancs and all manner of vehicles conveyed thousands to the celebration. They came from throughout Scotland, and extra police were mobilized to deal with the congestion.

The head forester on the estate of the Earl of Strathmore, father of the duchess, conducted the ceremony of lighting the beacon. He handed torches to the three youngest children available, and they touched the great pile of branches.

A huge flame shot into the dark skies as the fire spread. Sparks rose 200 feet and spread like fireworks as they fell over the throng. Some were slightly burned. The heat was terrific.

Beer from the many barrels, however, cooled countless throats as ale mugs clicked in toasts to the duchess and her second daughter. The people became merry and danced beneath the flickering light of the bonfire as the Scottish bagpipe players blew the shrill favorite airs of the Highlands.

They joined hands and danced in great circles, while the Duke of York and the Earl and Countess of Strathmore, parents of the duchess, stood above on the grounds at Glamis castle and watched the rollicking scene. When the beacon's light faded and the embers died the crowd returned to the village taverns and danced all night long.

Little Princess Sees Sister.

Princess Elizabeth, four-year-old first daughter of the Duke and Duchess of York, was taken to see her baby sister. She clapped her hands excitedly and laughed happily.

Church bells rang during the morning, throughout the countryside, including the famous old bell at Forfar village, "Old Lang Strang," which has hung in the belfry of the parish church for more than 300 years.

The villagers at Glamis seemed to feel the Gaelic inscription at Glamis castle, promising that a child born in the castle in August shall have a happy life, was a good omen. The old saying prophesies:

"Pleasant shall be its path, lucky its love, rich its life's reward."

It was recalled the Duchess of York was born August 4 at St. Paul's, Waldenbury, Hertfordshire. She celebrated her thirtieth birthday this month.

The London Daily Sketch says birth of a daughter instead of a son to the Duke and Duchess of York has necessitated passage of a special act of parliament to put beyond a question the succession to the throne.

The principal point of the paper's contention is that the British law of primogeniture does not apply to sisters. Thus if there is no male heir, two or more sisters become co-heiresses, and unless parliament regularizes their position the Princess Elizabeth and her baby sister conceivably may some day become co-heiresses to the throne.

This would create an impossible position, the paper says, and the crown might even go into abeyance. The contingency is recognized as remote, but it is contended the provision against it is necessary.

Gladys O'Donnell, Long Beach, Cal., who has led the west coast women's derby from its start at Long Beach Ca'., landed first at Kansas City yesterday at 3:44.

Nick Mamer, Spokane flyer, led the five-plane Seattle to Chicago derby into Aberdeen, S. D., at 4:52:49 Saturday afternoon after a hop from Bismarck, N. D.

Verne L. Roberts, Moline, Ill., who had been leading the men's class "B" Atlantic air derby, Hartford, Conn., to Chicago, was forced down by a broken valve at Lorraine, Ohio, yesterday, the lead switching to J. Wesley Smith, of Philadelphia. Four of the five fliers rested Saturday night at South Bend Ind., before starting the last lap of the 1,200-mile race, expecting to end at Chicago Sunday.

STUNTERS HOLD SWAY ON OPENING DAY.

BY OSCAR LEIDING.

CURTISS - REYNOLDS AIRPORT, CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—(AP)—America's aviation carnival, the tenth annual national air races, proved at the opening today to be a stunt fliers' holiday.

A trio of navy pilots and Captain Marcel Doret, France's acrobatic ace, shared high honors in throwing open their bag of tricks to grip the crowd with aerial antics.

The navy stunters—Lieutenants Mathias Gardner, Putt Storrs and F. M. Trapnell—performed for the first time in public, the ritual of maneuvers they have been practicing for several months over outlying sections of Virginia and Maryland.

Flies Upside Down.

Gardner, leading the section, crossed the field in inverted flight with his mates right side up, then looped as a single plane and, wing-tip to tail, climbed straight into the skies in close formation.

Flying in echelon they displayed the airman's idea of leap frog in the clouds—the plane on the outer left of the formation darting straight up, turning over on its back, and falling in place on the right side of the line. Over and over the hurdling was performed.

The "pushover" was another new contribution, the fliers falling in line, performing the first half of an outside loop, and sweeping in the opposite direction across the field on their backs.

Captain Doret, flying a standard French pursuit ship, became a flash of crimson and silver as he roared across the airport, his ship at full speed and the landing wheels less than 10 feet from the ground.

He darted straight into the skies, climbing up and up until the ship hung on its propeller, and then sweeping to the ground with snap barrel rolls.

Back across the field, he swept, his hands waving in the air, the controls free of guidance, taking charge again as the crowd-filled stands loomed in his face.

Twenty-one army pursuit ships opened the barnstorming program with a roar that rattled the grandstand seats. They sped in close formation and then, breaking into a long line, propeller to tail, like elephants on parade, formed an aerial circle which soon became a whirling screw that spiralled toward the ground.

Navy Aces Give Thrill.

A section of three ships did the "split," shooting head-on into the stands, the two on the sides pulling up and out from the leader, who darted in a steep climb directly over the spectators.

A navy squadron of 18 ships, with the famous Red Rippers, from the aircraft carrier Lexington, executed pinwheels and horizontal figure S's and then swung into a squirrel cage loop in full formation, the planes individually going into loose loops that, collectively, formed a perfect whirling circle in the skies.

The wings that the Wright brothers gave the world 27 years ago seemed feeble in contrast to the day's performers—sleek racers that have been tested in the crucible of day by day military and commercial work—until Al Wilson, Los Angeles, took the air in a copy of aviation's best in the box kite days.

Sitting in front in the full breeze, one hand grasping a wire for support, and a chattering motor behind him powering the pusher propeller, he performed stunts that out-did in spectacle what they lacked in speed.

He fish-tailed his quaint craft to the ground, swinging with wing tip grazing the grass, and bobbing across the field again like he was riding a rodeo broncho. He looped and dived, swept close to the ground and buzzed straight for the stands, until a crash seemed imminent—pulling up just short of the spectators and whirling away for a side slip toward the ground and a landing.

FRENCH POLICE PROBE DEATH OF N. Y. WOMAN

Found Dead in Bed at Villa at Deauville.

DEAUVILLE, France, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The police of this seaside resort today made public the details surrounding the mysterious death of Mrs. Alice Souther, described as the wife of George Souther, of New York, whose divorce proceedings were pending.

Mrs. Souther, who formerly was a Miss Harrington, of Washington, D. C., the police said, died suddenly at 7 o'clock yesterday morning in a villa she had rented here for the summer. Mrs. Souther had invited several friends to a celebration on the previous night of her thirtieth birthday.

In the early hours of yesterday one of the guests, said by the police to be Joseph Benson Rose, of New York, fell down a flight of stairs and suffered a deep and serious head wound which bled so profusely that his hostess became frightened and ill. She died a few minutes later.

Doctors said today that Rose was recovering rapidly.

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Aug. 23. (AP)—Queen Marie arrived here today with Princess Ileana from the Jugo-Slavian summer palace at Bled with the intention of attempting a further reconciliation between King Carol and Queen Helen.

It was stated here in authoritative quarters that statements that Queen Helen would enter a convent were completely without foundation.

VIENNA, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Barbu Jonescu, friend here of King Carol of Rumania, said today he had Carol's authority to deny emphatically that he was planning to marry either a French princess or Madame Lupescu, his former inamorata.

"Relations between King Carol and Queen Helen are most friendly since their reconciliation after the Rumanian church congress declared their divorce annulled," M. Jonescu said.

CHINESE AUTHORITIES DRIVE AGAINST REDS

Forget Civil War for Moment and Execute Communists.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Eclipsing temporarily China's formal civil war, government authorities devoted their attention over a wide area today to mopping up campaigns against reds. Numerous executions by officials and barbarous atrocities by communists figured in reports received here.

In Hankow anti-communistic defense forces arrested many suspected agitators and publicly executed 18 after conviction. In Nanking, the capital city, wide raids yesterday and today by nationalist soldiers resulted in 130 arrests in addition to scores previously apprehended. "Cells," or communist locals, were smashed and propaganda seized. Dynamite and other explosives were found. Authorities said reds intended using them to blow up government buildings.

In Canton, metropolis of southern China, an uncompromising campaign against communists was under way. Soldiers raided the government's police training school, where many allegedly have been converted to communism. Fifty arrests were made and seven ringleaders were executed.

From Hankow came a story of communists branding adherents with hot irons shaped like the sickle, their international emblem. The reports said entire armies in Hunan province had thus been branded, primarily to insure detection in event of escape or defection of red followers whose loyalty was doubted.

The conflict between government troops and northern rebel forces in Honan and Shantung provinces appeared to be marking time.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The navy department announced today that Colonel Randolph C. THE DANGERS OF RICHES—They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition.—1 Tim. 6:9.

PRAYER—"My dear Redeemer and my Lord, I read my duty in Thy word."

THE RIGHT AND WRONG WAY.

In this issue The Constitution publishes a news report from Rapid City, S. D., telling of the gratification of the citizens of that state over the benefits already derived from the only partly completed national memorial being carved by Gutzon Borglum on Mount Rushmore.

The report shows that during the months of February and March alone the combined circulation of newspapers carrying news items about the Rushmore memorial passed the 100,000,000 mark. In addition, copies of the official magazine of the memorial have been broadcast throughout the world. Great railroad companies and other large corporations have distributed the literature of the memorial by the tens of thousands—and paid large sums of money for the privilege.

As a result the eyes of the world are on Rapid City and thousands of tourists have been attracted this summer to South Dakota.

The successful progress of that work and the shameful status of the affairs of the Stone Mountain memorial furnishes a humiliating comparison.

From all over the country there has arisen a demand for a new deal in the affairs of the southern memorial. In reply to that demand a group of loyal and patriotic Atlanta citizens, including the mayor-elect of the city, have earnestly set about to find ways to resume work on the monument.

Backed by the hearty approval and encouragement of the public, they have met with only one serious stumbling block—the unreasonable and inexcusable attitude of the remnant of the memorial association, which doggedly persists in hanging on to the corpse of the great project, which they admit cannot be saved by them. But they hang on with grim determination to prevent anyone else from doing the work which they openly confess they cannot do.

With a record of abject failure which has brought down a shroud of humiliation not only on themselves, but on their city and section, they stubbornly and obstinately refuse to untie the hands of those who are willing, and able, to go about the work of removing the stigma of failure.

Of the Mount Rushmore and Stone Mountain memorials, similar in suggestion and scope and the conception of the same sculptor, one is on the highway to glorious completion, while the other is at a disgraceful standstill.

The national commission named by President Coolidge to supervise the Rushmore memorial went about their work in the right way. They co-operated with and encouraged the world-famed sculptor upon whose genius they had called to conceive and create the memorial.

The Stone Mountain Memorial Association went at their work in the wrong way when, without even giving him a hearing, they abruptly and defiantly dismissed the only sculptor who, having gone as far as he had, was naturally the one to finish the job.

Certainly no worse mess of the undertaking can be made by bringing Borglum back than has already been made.

There is everything to gain and nothing to lose in this effort to revive the great enterprise.

It is at least worth the trial.

THE FARM IS INVITING.

A strongly reasoned article on the agricultural situation in Georgia, contributed by J. T. Holleman, president of the Southern Mortgage Company, is printed on another page of this issue. It will inform and should inspire the reader who is interested in promoting the general welfare of the farmers of the state, for their prosperity is basic to most other prosperities.

Farming interests in Georgia have suffered in the past decade as have the same interests in all the agricultural states. Mr. Holleman expertly tells the reasons why, the effects and the prospects ahead. The farmers seem to have about "scraped the bottom" of their economic deflation and depression. But down in their valley of dry bones they must have learned some lessons of worth to them in their future operations.

Agriculture is not becoming one of the lost arts. The wise farmer is more numerously becoming a scientist. Man cannot live by bread alone, but he will always need it in his diet. Food must come from the ground until the heavens again rain manna, so that a great percentage of the people must till the soil to keep the race in strength and action. A wise old statesman once remarked that "the Lord is making more people every day, but He isn't making any more land." So the growing race must be fed from the land that is.

As Mr. Holleman argues, the farm offers to an enterprising and industrious man the certainty of decent living for himself and family. With a reasonable amount of land and equipment he can be independent of the vicissitudes of mechanical, commercial and service vocations. And with due common sense and thrift he can provide the accessories of modern life, the education of his children and the insurance of comfort in his less productive years.

Today the circumstances of agriculture should make it attractive to men, especially young men, who have an eye to their future. Land is now probably as cheap as it will be in another lifetime. The tools and methods of culture are better than ever since oxen were first hitched to crude plows. The variety of crops is greater and more in constant demand. The present low prices cannot become permanent and the profits of close farming are as sure to appear as those of trade and finance.

Here in Georgia the opportunities to get good farms on reasonable terms are plentiful and attractive. Those men will be wise who take prompt advantage of those opportunities and possess themselves in ready time of the means of an early independence.

And to such men we commend a careful perusal of the Holleman article in today's Constitution.

DUTY FIRST!

An interesting article in the magazine section of today's Constitution tells the story of the hardships endured by the famous Royal Canadian Mounted police, who traditionally "get their man" even under conditions which often seem insurmountable.

This record of the "mounties" for the past year is to them just another chapter of duty well done, and its revelation of resourcefulness and single-minded attention to duty is worth emulation by the police departments of all American cities.

It is too often in American cities that at least some members of police departments cannot be depended upon in emergencies because these officers have permitted themselves to become so involved by entangling alliances as to render them impotent when called upon for the protection of life and property.

The daily revelations of the underlying causes for the failure of the police of Chicago to rid that city of gang rule strikingly illustrate why crime conditions in America show up in such poor contrast to those just across the border in Canada.

Reports tell of police officers on the pay roll of law breakers; of joint memberships in "orders" the very existence of which constitute a threat to the peace of a community; and of "whoopee" parties in which officers of the law and the criminal element intermingle freely.

It is not to be wondered at that police with so little regard for the responsibilities and proprieties of their positions of public trust fail to "get their man" as do the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted.

The police of Canada are feared by the evil-doers of that country because they base their official and private conduct first and foremost upon fidelity and loyalty to duty. To them a law violator is a man who must be caught, even though he be a member of the family of the pursuing officer. No criminal is permitted to go free because he is "a member of the bunch" or because he belongs to some organization of which the officer is also a member. The preservation of peace is his watchword—and he is willing to die for it.

The policeman who allows himself to be swayed by the mob, or to be controlled by the prejudice or the passion of passing events, and who falters in his duty to protect the peace and to preserve the order of the community, in which he serves, is a disgrace to his calling.

THE BATTLE WITH CRIME.

In an address, Thursday evening at Chicago, to the American Bar Association, Chief Justice Hughes pressed home to them their "special responsibility" for the administration of justice, especially of the criminal law, in this country. In so speaking the eminent jurist, sitting at the head of the highest court in the world, voiced a sentiment that is rife in the minds of the vast majority of his countrymen, in his declaration that the nation's greatest need, in the opinion of its chief justice, is improvement in the administration of justice, especially of the criminal law.

It is the lawyers who fill the offices of prosecutors and who sit upon the benches to administer those laws. Naturally and justly the people look to the lawyers to be the most ardent and powerful class demanding the plenary enforcement of lawyer-made laws. And, as Chief Justice Hughes says, the lawyers are chiefly responsible for the making of our laws.

Modern crime has become a highly profitable profession. In many of its forms it deals in big money. It can finance defense lawyers and defense devices in large figures. Which probably explains why lawyers in legislatures all over the land too often fight down and defeat measures to speed and make more certain the punishment of crime, to abolish delays of trials and judgments, and to execute penal sentences. This has been so in Georgia—as it is so in other states.

The views so cogently expressed by the chief justice are encouraging, and there is a growing hope that the battle between crime and the law may yet and soon be won by the lovers of justice.

NO CURE IN COUEISM.

There is something humorously naive in the panacea for hard times proposed by the leaders of the republican campaign. They propose that everybody should quit talking about business depression, unemployment and reduced purchasing power and go about vociferating that "everything is lovely and the goose honks high!" That general chorus, they insist, would at once make all things "lovely," start the wheels of business on lively revolutions, and put an assembly note in the whistles of all the factories, and start a flood of gold through all the retail shops of the nation!

That is just the sort of prosperity prescription that we should expect from the political marplots who have brought the people into the existing economic doldrums and have no plans that promise to get them back into the flowing waters of work and trade. After spending 20 months and millions of dollars in cooking up a reimbursement tariff bill for their campaign contributors, keeping business in uncertainty, labor reduced and production halted, these political hucksters now fall back on Coue psychology and urge the despoiled people to shout "we're getting better every day in every way!"

But there are abundant signs that the people are well out by now of the Hoover hypnosis of 1928 and are not disposed soon again to listen to the republican charmers charm them ever so blithely and seductively. The cold facts of hard times have hit them in the neck, amidships, and in sore feet from tramping in search of markets and jobs. The ides of November are approaching and unless national human nature has become callous to suffering, there is coming a change of political policies and administration that will be phenomenal in the history of the country.

A DEMOCRATIC DILEMMA.

One who claims to be a political "observer" writes to the Washington Post to prove that the democrats are unlucky with New Yorkers as their presidential candidates. He notes that their first New York candidate was forced upon them in 1836 by President Jackson and the power of that great man secured his election. But, with Jackson off the field, in 1840 Van Buren, nominated for re-election, was defeated by Harrison, of Ohio, the whig candidate. Old Hickory lived on, however, to see his near Tennessee neighbor and pupil in democracy, James K. Polk, inaugurated president in 1845.

"Observer" says the democrats kept shy of New York until 1864, while the War Between the States was on, when, "hoping a military hero might win for them," they named General McClellan—but McClellan was not a New Yorker. The official record shows that he was nominated as "George B. McClellan, of New Jersey."

Then, according to "Observer," they lost with New Yorker candidates "in 1868 with Seymour, in 1872 with Greeley, in 1876 with Tilden and in 1880 with Hancock." But those last two items are wrong. Tilden was elected in 1876 and cheated of his election by "Aliunde Joe Bradley" sitting on an electoral commission. Hancock was not a New Yorker, but was nominated as "of Pennsylvania." Cleveland was of New York, was elected, defeated and elected again, while Parker and Smith were defeated New Yorkers. But in the years since 1836 the democrats have been defeated seven times with other candidates who were not New Yorkers.

The gravamen of "Observer's" letter is to warn the democrats not to nominate a New Yorker in 1932, but to find their candidate in the south, which "furnishes about all the electoral votes the democrats receive"—but those electoral votes, we might as well remember, are not enough to elect.

MICHIGAN AND GEORGIA.

Not alone in Georgia is the un-American and unjust practice of "taxation without representation" followed. Up in Michigan the latest report of the state tax commission shows that the total property valuation for the state for tax purposes is $8,450,030,000 and that 49 per cent of that valuation is in Wayne county in which Detroit is situated.

Yet Wayne county has no proportional representation in the legislative department of the state, whether based on population or on taxation. The injustice of the position of Wayne county and Detroit is the more glaring and indefensible when one notes that the other 82 counties of the state pay taxes on only 2 per cent more property and have an overwhelming majority in the state legislature that does the taxing and the spending.

The case is fairly paralleled by that of Fulton county and Atlanta, though in lesser proportions. The county has one-eighth of the population of the state and one-sixty-ninth of the members of the state house of representatives. It pays 24 per cent of the property taxes of the state and has only three voices in the 207 that vote the taxes upon her people. And yet the great majority of the people of the state, claiming to be democrats and devoted to the Jeffersonian and honest American principle of "equal and exact justice to all and special privileges to none," stick to the unequal system and take to themselves the special privilege of levying the bulk of the taxes of the state upon the people of 10 of the 161 counties in the state.

With such a system, violating every acceptable rule of right and democracy, it is scarcely to be wondered at that the state gained less than her birth rate in population in the past ten years and has lost two of her present members in the house of congress.

WANTS YET TO BE FILLED.

It may seem tough luck that 7,000,000 of the 25,000,000 families in the United States do not own an automobile. That fact may worry their pride not a little, and worry the automobile makers and dealers a whole lot, but there should be much consolation to the flivverless families that they do not have to find parking space when they are "down town" or find a traffic cop's police court ticket on their windshield when they come back to their car. There are compensations in all predicaments if one only has eyes and imagination to detect them.

Again there is seeming hard luck in the statistics that 20,000,000 families have no adequate radio sets. One can acutely sympathize with those households so bereft of the privilege of listening in on Doc Fess broadcasting eulogies of Hooverism and Jouett Shouse lambasting the aforesaid Hooverism and the republican Fessters in congress who slammed the Grundy tariff upon the backs of a suffering nation.

What is real mean luck is the obsence of bath tubs in 4,000,000 homes and that 3,000,000 homes are without a kitchen sink with running water; but worst of all is the authentic statement that 5,000,000 families "are without proper or adequate food, clothing, or housing." That is a condition both morally and economically unjustified among a people holding $360,000,000,000 of wealth and having incomes totalling $90,000,000,000 in every average year. That wealth and the turnover of that enormous income should keep every willing soul in the nation employed at wages sufficient for the American average standard of living. How to attain that normalcy is the economic and social problem that Americans must solve or accept a broad stigma of shame.

Good old Sister Fess says "prohibition is not an issue between the parties." Certainly not. It is only a tummy ache in both of them.

The Zuta records show that many Chicago officials knew where to go for "easy money"—hence the gang rule in Chicago.

The president is increasing his commission-appointing habit, but the people are wondering what they are to get out of it all.

The supreme court of Pennsylvania had judicious regard for the hot end of Pinchot.

The Illinois democrats have gone wet—again!

LOOKING AND LISTENING

BY SAM W. SMALL

The Case of the Atlanta Census and What Should Be Done About It.

It is scarcely believable that Dr. Steuart, the director of the national census, will indorse the dictum of his assistant, Mr. Hill, and undertake to publish in the permanent records of the country the population of the "borough of Atlanta" only as the official population of the "City of Atlanta."

Such a decision would be so arbitrary, unjust and unprecedented as to discredit the fairness of the directors themselves and the general integrity of their official work. They can hardly think that the people of Atlanta and of Georgia will submit silently to so manifest a denial of their rights and of their lawful representation in the supposedly straight and honest census of the nation's states and cities.

* * * *

A Paramount State Question.

This Atlanta census issue is not solely one to interest and excite the people of the city. It rises to the supreme dignity of asserting and defending an indefeasible sovereign right of the state itself. It affects every citizen of Georgia in his right as a component of a state unalienably entitled to the rights and powers of local self-government.

To allow this threatened census outrage to be perpetrated until every defense against it that is provided in the federal constitution shall have been exhausted by the state authorities will be the worst surrender and humiliation that Georgia has ever undergone.

In the days of Governor Troup, whom Jefferson called "the hot-headed Georgian," the people of the state were summoned to "stand to their arms" to resist an encroachment upon their sovereign rights by the supreme court of the United States. The resistance was successful; the wrong was prevented.

* * * *

The Duty of the Governor.

As this is a matter of supreme importance to all the people of the state it is the bounden duty of the governor of the state, representing its sovereign rights, to take the leadership in the crisis and assert those rights before the administration responsible for the census direction. Failing there, should a failure happen, he should take the issue to the only tribunal established by the federal constitution to take jurisdiction of it and render a plenary judgment, and that is the supreme court of the United States.

The national constitution provides that "in all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a state shall be a party, the supreme court shall have original jurisdiction."

This census issue, if it must go to a court, is such a case as those that must be brought before the supreme court and adjudicated by it only.

* * * *

Mandamus Seems the Recourse.

In the event that Dr. Steuart should affirm the Hill dictum and refuse to publish the true census figures for the city of Atlanta, as established by a valid law of the state, the remedy seems to lie in an application to the supreme court of the United States for a writ of mandamus commanding the director of the census to respect the state law and enumerate Atlanta's population in accordance with it.

The famous and fundamental case of Marbury vs. Madison supplies the modus and precedent undoubtedly. In the last resort, therefore, Governor Hardman should make such application for a mandamus in the name of the state and direct Attorney-General Napier to represent the state before the supreme tribunal.

There is scarcely a doubt that the present supreme court, strongly leaning to state rights, would uphold the law of the state and order the census of Atlanta in consonance with it.

* * * *

The State Creates Its Cities.

It is common and notorious law in all the states of the Union that every state has the sole right and sovereign power to create its political units, counties, towns, cities alike.

They are created and endowed with temporary powers for the better administration of the state's powers. No other authority exists under the sun, except a military despotism, to say when a city shall be or not be. Any mere collection of people and houses does not make a city. It must have legal sanction by the sovereign on whose domain the collection exists.

Only the state of Georgia, by authority of its people, through a provision of its constitution or a permitted act of its legislature, can establish a city.

By such an act in 1929 the city of Atlanta was established by metes and bounds and there is no authority in any bureaucrat of the federal government to ignore or nullify that act.

* * * *

Usurping a Despotic Power.

When a director of the federal census assumes the power to set aside a solemn law of a sovereign state he usurps a despotic power.

In the matter of a city's existence time is not of the essence of the fact. He might just as arbitrarily decide that there is no such city as "Greater New York" because it was formed on January 1, 1898, by the consolidation of several counties into five boroughs of a united municipality. Would the director of the census dare to segregate those boroughs now and publish only the figures of Manhattan borough as those of "New York city?" He would not!

Recently the city of Alexandria, in Virginia, after years of court litigation, annexed a considerable area and population of Arlington county and the director of the census is counting the annexed portions as of the city of Alexandria.

He cannot with justice do otherwise in the pending case of Atlanta and the state should see to it that he does us such equal and exact justice.

TEXT AND PRETEXT

BY M. ASHBY JONES

Across the Rio Grande

Many years ago, before we had dug a Panama canal, a story was current of the meeting of two German immigrants in New York. After the proper greetings, Haus said to Fritz, "Did you come dat Atlantic over?" "Nein," said Fritz. "Den you come dot Pacific across?" "Nein," was the reply. "Den you come dot Horn around?" and Fritz still shook his head. "Den you have not arrived" said Hans. "Ya," said Fritz. "I coom dot Mexico through." And some of us in this Mexican Seminar party, as we see revealed from day to day the ever surprising wonders of this land, which is "so near and yet so far," wonder whether the United States and Mexico would not have been better neighbors if more of us had "coom dot Mexico through."

Sharp Contrasts.

I have had the experience of crossing many of these artificial border lines, which divide nation from nation, but I cannot recall any such striking contrast in the physical appearance of two nationalities as that which presents itself to you on crossing the Rio Grande. Indeed one does not have to wait for the actual crossing of the river to behold this dramatic difference. Your train is stopped on the bridge midway between the northern and southern shores of the little river with the grand name for the customs inspection. As is the way with all customs inspectors, you are given ample time to view the scenery. Laredo, Texas, U. S. A., and Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, are stretched out before you in panoramic contrast. To the north there is the familiar, standardized, Nordic, 100 per cent American, twentieth century arrangement for a convenient and efficient life, which we may find anywhere from the gulf to the Great Lakes. To the south, facing it in complacent, undisturbed, self-satisfaction, is an Indian civilization of more than ten centuries ago, colorfully veneered by the coming of the Spaniard in the sixteenth century. We had no sooner crossed the river than we began running into Indian villages with their adobe walled huts and picturesquely thatched roofs. Instantly there comes over the traveler that feeling of being in a very foreign country.

How quickly and shockingly this happens! Mexico is our neighbor, just that, lying side by side, separated only at this time of the year by a sluggish little stream, are two civilizations a few miles to the south of us, we are accustomed to think. We forget which find their sources in such totally different fountain springs. The most revolutionary revelation which came to this visitor is, that Mexico is not Spanish, but Indian. I would not discount for a moment the part which Spain has played in the story of this land, nor would I overlook the permeating, and even permanent, influence which the Spanish people have had in the making of modern Mexico. Nevertheless we can never rightly interpret this nation until we understand that Mexico is an Indian republic. Nor are we apt to deal with them justly and helpfully until we deal with them as Indians, who inherit their sentiments and traditions, their gifts and their ideals, from an ancient past which is their very own.

First Impressions.

We must read again in the light of the revealing years the story of the coming of Cortez with his Spanish adventurers. He found a civilization of beauty and efficiency, whose story ran back at least to the early years of the Christian era. With little appreciation of the Aztecs' art, social system or genius for government, the Spaniard sought, by imposing his own religion, art and government upon the Indian, to exploit him for his own greed in this world and his glory in the world to come. Even thus early in my experiences in this wonderful land I am convinced that when the story of Mexico from Cortez to the present day is told it will be the story first of the physical conquest of the Indians by Spanish soldiers and afterwards the slow but sure spiritual conquest of the Spaniard by the Indian.

I am here in Mexico City with a very preferred group of American students, who under very favorable circumstances are hoping to learn more about our neighbors. The group is made up of some quite significant teachers, social workers, newspaper and magazine writers, businessmen and a sprinkling of preachers. Among the well-known personalities in the party one notes Judge Florence Allen, of the supreme court of Ohio; Paul U. Kellogg, of the Survey; Dr. Chester Lloyd Jones, head of the economics school of the University of Wisconsin; Miss Comstock, president of Radcliffe college; Frank Tannenbaum, the brilliant free lance writer and social student; Dr. Mary Austin, the outstanding student of the Indian contribution to American civilization, and many others. President Rubio has already received us very graciously at Chapultapec castle, and the gracious and beloved Ambassador Morrow has given us a charming welcome to the beautiful home of the embassy. We gather together daily for lectures by outstanding representatives of Mexican life, and also divide into round tables for specific study and discussion. My impressions, not my crystallized convictions, will be shared with any patient readers who may care to follow me during the coming weeks.

NEW YORK SKYLINES

BY CHARLES ESTCOURT, JR.

(Written Exclusively for The Constitution and North American Newspaper Alliance.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—Captain Charles Thompson, who for four seasons has come up from the south and fished around Montauk Point, at the far end of Long Island, is extremely popular among persons interested in developing that place as a fishing resort. When he tells fish stories he can extend his arms to their limit in estimating the size of the fish and still be far short of the truth.

While fishing with John Wanamaker, Jr., and Mrs. Wanamaker, recently, he harpooned a 6,000-pound white-finned whale. It towed their craft more than four hours. The Wanamakers also caught a 600-pound swordfish.

Among Captain Thompson's fishing clients have been the late President Harding, Grover Cleveland, Waldorf Astor, John Jacob Astor, the late Theodore Roosevelt, Andrew Carnegie, Jack Dempsey and Reinald Werrenrath, the baritone. Earlier this season the captain was Mayor Walker's guest.

Hours for People Who Work.

The night of October 7 is announced as the first "suburban night" for the patrons of Charles Hopkins, first theatrical producer to take to the idea of actors' equity that commuters would appreciate earlier performances so they wouldn't have to miss trains or skip part of the last act in order to make a train.

It is possible that this basically earlier-to-bed notion will be appreciated by children of Gotham as well as of the suburbs. Long ago it was the leisure class, with an elastic schedule, that patronized the theater, but now the followers of the theater include men and women who must be at the office or store early in the day. They may have a long subway ride home when the show's over and a long ride next day to work.

If this experiment works in the theater perhaps department stores will find it worth while to cater to office people, who have only the lunch hour free for shopping, and to reinforce their sales groups at noon instead of cutting them down as at present.

His Job to Get Jobs.

Edward Rybicki, philosopher-printer, has expressed a wish for the "unlimited credit" of the Count of Monte Cristo, in the novel by Dumas. A man without means, who has left his own humble job in a newspaper composing room to run the city's free employment bureau, Mr. Rybicki is getting the most desperate letters from wives of men who have been out of work for long periods.

Thousands have stood in line outside the bureau in hopes of getting the jobs that his staff has sought. Rybicki is an East Sider and people in need often go to him rather than to a charitable organization. He is a Typographical Union delegate to the central labor council and during the war was investigator and arbitrator for the department of labor.

His experience on this new job leads him to consider the situation bad enough to warrant reduction in hours and pay for the sake of men and women entirely idle for from six months to a year.

New Waldorf Telephone Service.

While the new Empire State building is rising above the rest of the city on the site of the old Waldorf-Astoria, there is rising on Park Avenue a shining white new Waldorf-Astoria, which will have a telephone exchange personnel of about 106, composed of 84 operators, 21 supervisors, and three chief supervisors, working in eight-hour shifts. That's equivalent to the telephone personnel of a city of 25,000.

It is estimated that the switchboard will handle annually nearly 12,000,000 calls, composed of 4,000,000 outgoing and from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 incoming. The hotel telephone bill will approximate $200,000 a year.

Innovations include automatic ringing devices, telephone typewriters to relay messages to proper floors and two telephones for every one of 1,550 double rooms.

Scandals and Democracy.

One striking thing about the current political situation here is that residents of New York generally are not particularly shocked by the character of charges against certain office holders and judges. Any specific exposure of alleged venality has to be pretty bad to make the people think less of government personnel than they already do.

"One will find at all stages," says Dr. Young B. Smith, of Columbia University's law school, "the existence of considerable opinion on the part of intelligent people that democratic government is a delusion and a snare, and, in all frankness, it must be admitted that this opinion is not without evidence to support it."

There are probably more people in this city who will agree with Dr. Smith than anywhere else in the country.

Seen and Heard.

"When do we eat?" was formerly the stock question among the theatrically unengaged on Broadway. "Will we ever eat?" is more like it now among the vaudeville folk. One chain has been cutting so that now only 13 weeks are left out of a total of 25 playing weeks here and elsewhere. In two months eight local theaters have discarded vaudeville.

A scheme's afoot for small motion picture exhibitors to sound the prosperity bugle in their towns. They will impress their public with the good word that things are looking up. All they have to do then is to get the people to attend the theater.

The man that conducted the first jazz band to play George M. Cohan's "Over There" in the front lines is John Link, now traffic officer at Fiftieth street and Seventh avenue, where the theaters twinkle brightest.

In looking into a recent increase in the price of milk here the health department's real concern has been for the stomach rather than the pocketbook. Doctors contend that the city should consume 7,000,000 quarts of milk daily, or about twice what is consumed, to maintain a proper level of health. A quart daily per resident is the idea.

The Background of Foreign Affairs

The Chameleon Doctrine of Mr. Monroe; Revival of German Awkwardness; Fear Redividing Europe; the Church Outlaws War.

BY HENRY KITTREDGE NORTON.

In these days of numerous institutes for the discussion of international affairs, a never-failing topic is the Monroe Doctrine. Our statesmen have disagreed with the statesmen of other countries and among themselves as to what it means ever since it was first pronounced. Its meaning is probably not as clear today as it was in 1823.

One cause of this confusion is the common practice of referring to the Monroe Doctrine every action we take vis-a-vis any Latin-American country. In a memorandum recently published by the state department, Mr. Reuben Clark, former undersecretary of state, has stripped the doctrine of its accretions and restored it to some semblance of its original meaning. He says it states a case of "The United States vs. Europe," not of "The United States vs. Latin-America."

Mr. Clark does not, however, go so far as to forbid the United States to do many of the things it has done in the Caribbean and elsewhere. He simply says they are not part of the Monroe Doctrine. But the Latin-American countries have never expressed any particular dissatisfaction with the Doctrine as it affects Europe. They would like to know what we are going to do to them. This neither the memorandum nor any other statement has ever defined with sufficient clarity to satisfy them.

Dr. James Brown Scott's suggestion at the University of Virginia that each of the other American countries make an announcement of its own against European invasion of this hemisphere might answer Latin-American criticism is that criticism were actually directed against the Monroe Doctrine. But as the criticism is directed against the policy of the United States toward Latin-America, the suggestion does not satisfy.

What the policy of the United States toward Latin-America will be during all the years to come, no man can tell. It depends upon so many unknown factors and considerations that to predict it or attempt to formulate it for all time would be utterly futile. History, however, furnishes one constant. The United States has never intervened in any state which was conducting its affairs in a peaceful and orderly manner.

Although the list of the world's great psychologists contain many German names, there has been abundant evidence of the ineptitude of German leaders so far as international psychology is concerned. Much of this was furnished during the war, but there has been plenty since.

If there is one matter dearer to the heart of all Germans than any other, it is the revision of the Treaty of Versailles and the restoration of German prestige. This involves a wish for the recovery of some lost territory, especially on the eastern frontiers.

Such a desire runs directly counter to the determination of the most powerful forces in Europe to uphold the treaties at all cost. Yet it is by no means inconceivable that Germany can realize a part of her desire. France and her associates have already yielded some—and they may yield more. The one thing they have not done and the one thing that it is inconceivable that they should do is to yield one iota to force or the threat of force.

Herr Treviranus, whose successful revolt against the nationalistic follies of Alfred Hugenberg has put him at the head of a new conservative alignment, has not yet learned the lesson. In the enthusiasm inspired by his success in Germany, he has looked for larger worlds to conquer and has been making speeches telling what Germany demanded and proposed to do in regard to the Polish Corridor and other items.

Exactly as the eagerness of an offside football player penalizes his team, so has Herr Treviranus set back the German cause which he himself holds dear. Every such menacing gesture on the part of powerful Germans arouses a corresponding fear in France and renews the determination of the French nationalists to hold Germany down at all costs. Just so much farther are the two countries removed from the spirit of co-operation and mutual accomodation in which alone Germany has been able to secure concessions from France.

More than that, Herr Treviranus' misdirected fervency has revived the spirit of antagonism which was rife immediately following the war and has been gradually weakening since. The French nationalistic leaders, M. Poincare prominent among them, have always insisted that Germany's gestures of friendship were merely a mask for her preparations for forceful revision of the treaties. It took all the political skill of Aristide Briand years of effort to wean the French people away from these leaders and to effectuate a policy of conciliation with Germany.

Briand draws his inspiration from the future as Poincare draws his from the past. When a Stresemann walks with a Briand France and Germany can work together for European peace and harmony. When a Treviranus challenges a Poincare, France and Germany range themselves on opposite sides of a fighting issue, the forcible revision of the treaties.

And all Europe is drawn to one side or the other of the battleline. France summons to her side the hosts of the Little Entente and Poland and several other countries whose interests demand the preservation of the status quo. Germany rallies the defeated nations and those who might profit from a change in the fundamental public law of Europe. Italy has recently announced her leaning toward this side.

The future of Europe, whether it shall be one of peace and progress or of efforts reduced to futility and hopes blasted by hostility, depends upon whether the spirit of Briand and Stresemann or that of Poincare and Treviranus shall prevail. All the laws of logic and all the dictates of common sense would lead straight to the conclusion that all concerned had far more to gain from the former than the latter. But nationalistic psychology prides itself upon its freedom from subservience to either logic or sense.

Across the Thames from the house of parliament stands Lambeth palace, the London residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Here the archbishop has called into conference the bishops of the world to discuss matters of high church policy. Not the least interesting of the resolutions of the assembled dignitaries was one declaring that war is incompatible with the teachings of Jesus.

Many good people had long since come to that conclusion but most of them had never found out just what to do about it when war came. Somehow or other, it always appeared that the cause of their own country had divine sanction and that they should go out and kill in its service. Almost without exception the clergy indorsed this view and we had the astonishing result that on both sides of the battlelines the priests of the same God were invoking His blessing upon the national efforts to slaughter the opposing nations.

Now the bishops of Lambeth assembled have legislated against such inconsistencies. Henceforth neither clergymen nor communicants are to yield themselves to the seductive emotions of nationalism in the face of a national crisis. War is not to be countenanced. Instead the weight of the ecclesiastical influence is to be thrown into the scale in favor of arbitration and conciliation.

Such a procedure will vastly simplify the disentanglings of conscience for cleric and layman alike. But it puts religious emotion in opposition to patriotic emotion and in such a conflict, who shall pick the winner?

Buy Farm Lands Now, Urges Holleman In Citing Distinct Improvement In Agricultural Outlook in Georgia

Editor Constitution: There is no question now so generally discussed as the farm problem. The special session of congress, the passage of the agricultural marketing act, the setting up of the federal farm board and the great drouth have focussed attention on this problem, and people everywhere are getting a clearer understanding of it than they ever had before.

I have been reviewing, in thought, the period of our agricultural troubles. While it seems much longer, you will be surprised to know that it was not till 1923—only seven years ago—that any of the life insurance companies took title under foreclosure to a farm in Georgia. It is true that the foundations of our troubles were laid in 1920, when the program of deflation cut cotton prices from 40 cents to 10 cents in six months and when the boll weevil reduced our crop to 600,000 bales in 1921, to 700,000 in 1922 and to 800,000 in 1923, the total for the three years being no more than we had often made in one year.

Ten years ago there was not a dissatisfied land-owner to be found in the state. There was a ready buyer for any farm offered for sale. Many farms were sold at $100 per acre and frequently at much higher prices. Ten years ago there was not to be found a dissatisfied investor in Georgia farm mortgages. High officials and expert appraisers of the half dozen or more great life insurance companies then lending in Georgia had visited the state many times during many years, had seen all the farms on which they held loans and had found these loans eminently satisfactory and highly remunerative. From the time they entered the state—and some of them began as far back as 1898—they had experienced no serious trouble. All interest and taxes had been paid, all principal paid when due, or willingly extended, and not one of them had taken farms under foreclosure. And the same thing was true as to loans made by individuals, savings banks and others.

It is not necessary to relate the events since 1920, or to set forth in detail, present agricultural conditions. Whatever the causes may have been and whatever the situation now is, I assert that neither the farmers nor the lands of Georgia are responsible. I assert further, that neither the mortgage companies nor their local correspondents are responsible. And the statements made in the foregoing paragraph show that this conclusion is correct. And the books and records of the great life insurance companies making farm loans in Georgia for the 22-year period between 1898 and 1920 will stand forever as definite and absolute proof of the truth of this statement.

This analysis of the situation should give great encouragement to all Georgians. If the farmers and the farms of this state were capable of bringing about the great prosperity that existed up to 1920, and if we still have these same farmers and these same farms, why is it not possible to restore our lost prosperity? Well-informed Georgians have never lost faith in farm lands and have never doubted their value. They simply have not had the money with which to buy. But many of them have now caught their breath. Many of them have been making money during the last ten years and their thoughts now turn to investment in farms.

Improvement in Outlook.

Now, in spite of the gloomy picture that might be drawn of agriculture throughout the United States, in spite of the serious land problem, in spite of the low price of cotton, in spite of the obstacles confronting the farm board, I insist that there is a distinct improvement in the outlook in Georgia. I think the crisis was passed some time ago. When we produced 1,400,000 bales of cotton last year, we reached the turning point. And, incidentally, when we did that, we completely answered the statement made in some quarters that Georgia would never "come back" as a cotton state. We also produced many other crops in abundance, to say nothing of the great progress made in live stock, poultry and dairying. We seem to be in much better position than the grain growing states of the west, whose troubles are at such high tide that the secretary of agriculture and the chairman of the federal farm board have found it necessary to make them a personal visit and endeavor to inspire them with the courage necessary to meet the disasters which threaten. In the meantime we are beginning to realize the disastrous results of the great drouth. President Hoover has summoned the governors of a dozen states to a conference. Bad as the situation is, how much worse it would be if the crop curtailers and acreage reductionists could have had their way. The nation would today be face to face with a food shortage.

In support of the assertion that conditions are improving in Georgia we can truthfully use the argument that foreclosures are falling off, which means that farms for sale are more plentiful now than they will ever be again. We can call attention to the fact that there are 6,500 more farms in operation now than in 1925, showing that people are going back to the farms and this movement will slowly increase land values. We can refute the statement and remove the impression that conditions are worse here than anywhere. If this was ever true, it is not now, and they are going to be better here than anywhere else. We can say, and I believe the final census figures will show it, that the white people who were forced from their farms from 1920 to 1925 are still in the state.

If anybody tries to throw cold water on the situation by saying the farm board has failed, the reply is that the leaders of farm relief are not discouraged, that nobody has surrendered the fight for relief except those who never favored it, and that the efforts of the board have given everybody a clearer understanding of the troubles in agriculture than they ever had before, and sooner or later we are going to get results. But if there is no hope in that direction, if the friends of farm relief are wrong, if both political parties meant nothing when they promised in their platforms equality for agriculture, if manufacturers can be helped by legislation and farmers cannot, if Coolidge and Hoover and Hyde and Legge are right when they say the only hope is reduction of acreage and curtailment of production, if the farm problem is nothing but an endurance contest between individual farmers and different sections of the country and the contest must last until production is no more than domestic demand, if it means the survival of the fittest, then let the contest begin.

In such a contest, Georgia and the south will make a good showing. Men were cultivating farms in Georgia and building a splendid civilization here when the west was a wilderness. We have endured longer and we have endured more. Before the Civil War, every Georgia plantation was self-supporting. We recovered from the Civil War and we can recover from the World War. We have the men, we have the land, we have the geographical location, we have the climate, we have the crops, we have the natural resources.

More Farms in Cultivation.

Figures published this month by the census bureau show that there are 6,500 more farms in cultivation in Georgia now than in 1925. This is conclusive proof that our greatest farm abandonment occurred between 1920 and 1925 and that, since the last named date, the trend has been in the other direction. At the end of the next five years there will be many times 6,500 new farms in operation in Georgia. Never was there a greater opportunity for farm ownership. Of the many farms for sale, a comparatively small proportion of them are owned by non-resident individuals, firms and corporations. These people have cut prices to the bone and offer most reasonable terms of payment. They lent their money in good faith and they ought to be reimbursed, dollar for dollar. They have been most patient and most reasonable. I have never doubted that, in the end, they will be repaid in full. These non-resident owners of farms taken under foreclosure have believed in Georgia, they believe in Georgia now, but they have waited a long time, and at times they almost lose hope. It will be a great day for the state when all these non-resident owners have disposed of their holdings. I want to say to them that it is my sincere belief that they will not have to wait much longer. And when they have disposed of their holdings, the value of every other acre in the state will rise. Therefore, it is all important to the whole state that these farms be sold.

And in taking stock of our great state, let us never forget that before the crash came Georgia had in operation more farms than any state but Texas, that she was the second state in cotton production and that in the value of her agricultural products she ranked fifth among all the states of the Union. As surely as the years roll by, she will regain her lost position. The crop report of August 8 gives her third place in cotton production, with Texas first and Mississippi second. She has crawled up from sixth place in 1926, displacing on the way Alabama, Arkansas and Oklahoma, and she may displace Mississippi in the final returns. And let us not overlook the wonderful industrial development which has been going on in the state for several years, and is increasing by leaps and bounds. These great industries have brought into the state millions of dollars and created millions of new wealth for our people. But we do not want to see the farms neglected, and have them become mere breeding places for furnishing workers for industrial plants. We want to see prosperity on the farm as well as in the factory.

And to Georgians let me say: You should not be uneasy. You know what sort of a state Georgia is. You know the mettle of Georgians. You know what our farms will produce. You know what they are worth. Instead of fretting because you cannot sell land, you ought to buy more land. Buy it while it is very plentiful and very cheap. You are not obliged to live on it. You are not obliged to cultivate it. You are not obliged to rent it out. Buy it, salt it down for the future and some day you will find that you have made an excellent investment. And, if you are living in the city, working for a salary, you cannot do a better thing than buy a farm. The time may come when your health will fail, or you may want to take life easier, or your employer may find it necessary to drop you from the pay roll. Then you will have a place to go. In owning a farm you will have at once and in one a business and a home.

Buy Farm Lands Now.

You can now easily see that my purpose in this article is to arouse the interest of all Georgians, rich and poor, in taking off the market by purchase all the foreclosed farms in the state, especially those held by non-residents. And let me say that not in years has there been a better demand for lands. And this demand comes, not from outside the state, but from home folks. While the matter of repeopling our vacant lands and redeeming our foreclosed farms is peculiarly the work and the problem of our own people, the job is a big one, and we are going to need all the help we can get. Therefore, we invite and will welcome all those from any other section of this country who elect to come to Georgia and make their homes with us.

When the census figures are complete I feel sure they will show that the white people who left the farms during the last 10 years are still in the state, with few exceptions. They are potential purchasers of farms. The moment they are able, they will return to the country. Here is work for leading men in all the counties. They should encourage and help these people to go back to the farm. Every bank in Georgia, big and little, should stand ready to assist in this work. Many of those who have lost their farms have already bought them again. Many are now tenants on the farms they once owned and they will certainly buy them again if possible. So it will not do to say there are so many farms for sale we can never hope to sell them. The answer is: The same people who owned them once are still in the state and are anxious to own them again. In short, buyers for all these farms are present, if they can only be financed. The greatest problem in Georgia today is the land problem. Its solution lies in transforming the tenants now on the farms into owners and in putting back on the farms as owners those who once owned them but who have lost them during the last 10 years. A most difficult problem indeed. But it is worth something to have it stated definitely so that we may all know what the job is that must be done.

As further encouragement to our people let me tell you of a meeting held in Atlanta Saturday, July 26, of those who have been struggling for a long time with the land problem. The meeting was made up of farm loan men and farm land men from many sections of the state and from Alabama, Tennessee and South Carolina. But most important of all, the biggest life insurance and mortgage companies in the country sent high officials to meet and confer with us.

These representatives of these great companies, made able addresses, full of many valuable suggestions. They reaffirmed their faith in Georgia, expressed full confidence in the solution of our problems and promised their continued co-operation. And in all these speeches there was an expression of hope and belief that these farms should be and can be sold to those who once owned them, to those who now occupy them as tenants and to people who live in the neighborhood.

Work for Georgians.

This is a work that must be done in Georgia if we expect ever to dispel the cloud hanging over the state, and everybody should help in every possible way. Those who live in the large cities of the state should be just as much concerned in the land problem as those who live in the country and in the small towns. For, whether we realize it or not, we are all in the same boat. Wealthy men in Georgia may well consider an investment in land, especially in some of these big plantations which can be bought now at prices far less than their real value, and will certainly be in demand in the years to come.

Another encouraging phase of the present situation is this: Big business—and I use these words, not in any disparaging sense, but in full recognition of the debt the country owes to its brilliant leaders in every line of endeavor—big business, which has, itself, been undergoing drastic deflation since October, 1929, is beginning to see what hit the farmer in 1920 and now understands that in order to save itself, it must save the rest of us. Big business cannot remain big or grow bigger, if the purchasing power of the masses is destroyed. For, big business has many things to sell. It sells manufactured articles of every conceivable sort. It sells freight and passenger transportation. It sells light and power. It sells stocks and bonds. It sells life insurance, fire insurance and insurance of many other kinds. It sells credit. It sells service in many forms.

Big business realizes now, as never before, that the small business man must be allowed to exist and be enabled to prosper, that unemployment must cease, that those who work, not only in the factories, but in the commercial and financial establishments of the country, must be kept employed at a living wage, and that the farmers must be enabled to sell their products above cost of production and be properly financed in their operations. And, to an extent never before experienced, we may expect help from big business in solving our problems.

We dare not let agriculture languish and die. We dare not let the individual home-owning, independent farmer perish from the earth. He is the bulwark of our liberty.

Mrs. Jacobs Urges Support of Program To Prevent War

BY MRS. SINCLAIR JACOBS,
Chairman of International Co-operation to Prevent War for the Georgia League of Women Voters.

In his address last Armistice Day President Hoover said: "But peace is not a static thing. To maintain peace is as dynamic in its requirements as is the conduct of war. We cannot say, "Let there be peace" and go about our other business.

On August 27 we celebrate the anniversary of an occasion which provided a means and an impetus to work further to perfect equipment and preparedness for peace. On that day, in 1928, the representatives of 15 powers pledged their nations to settle all disputes that might arise between them only by pacific means. Less than 11 months later this pact, ratified by the original 15 signatories, was proclaimed in effect. It has since been ratified by 43 other governments and is in process of ratification, having already been signed—by four more—so that only two nations in the world—Argentina and Brazil—have not shown interest in forswearing war.

This pact calls definitely for a complete reversal of age-old habits of mind and action on the part of all the nations. The attitude of mind of the peoples of the earth need change. A world peace system must be substituted for the war system of the past. Confidence in each other's good faith must be developed to replace the deep-seated suspicions, hatreds, fears of ages past. These changes require re-education, not only of statesmen and leaders, but the millions whose ideals and desires should determine national policies. There is no doubt that the peoples of the world are convinced of the futility of war—nor is there doubt that in this country they have not yet recognized the instrumentalities for the pacific settlement of controversies between nations.

In ratifying the general treaty for the renunciation of war, we have pledged ourselves to a principle and left for future action the making of definite arrangements as to how that principle should be worked out in practice. The permanent court of international justice, commonly termed the World Court, provides for the judicial settlement of international controversies. In speaking of the establishment of this court and its purpose in his inaugural address President Hoover said "No more potent instrumentality for this purpose has been conceived and no other is practicable of establishment." Charles Evans Hughes told the American Society of International Law: "And so far as we can see into the future there will be but one" (court.) He also declared the United States will gain by adherence and lose by abstention. Mr. Hughes at the time of this utterance was a judge of the court and knew well whereof he spoke.

Our membership in the World Court is essential if it is to be a real World Court and truly effective. Our interests are fully protected, and our rights established. Our adherence is necessary if we wish our cosigners to have confidence in our taking seriously our pledge to the nations of the world—the high contracting powers, that we "condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies," "that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means."

The League of Women Voters supports the adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice; the codification of international law; the participation of the United States in conferences for the international reduction of armament and support of treaties to this end; international reduction of expenditures for war and national measures directly related to such international reduction treaties; official participation of the United States in economic and humanitarian conferences and commissions designed to promote international harmony, and support of treaties to this end—the settlement of international difficulties by arbitration or other peaceful means and treaties having the same end in view (particularly the Pan-American treaty for arbitration, signed at the seventh Pan-American conference in January, 1929—still in the hands of the senate committee on foreign affairs), and economic agreements in the interest of peace.

On its program for study is the foreign policy of the United States and its conduct; domestic policies affecting international relations; the causes and cures of international economic friction and the possibilities of world co-operation.

An eminent French writer and speaker, Pierre de Lanux, visiting this country last year, after an absence of seven years, noted a great advance and progress in public education, and gave credit for it to the associations which make it their duty to educate public opinion. Referring to the foreign policy association and the League of Women Voters, he called them, along with the press, "the collaborators of statesmen."

The comprehensive program, just outlined, if thoroughly pursued and digested, makes the continuance of that appellation well deserved and assured.

For hundreds of years men alone have governed, for 10 brief years the mothers of men have officially had a part in government (in our part of the new world), and in these brief 10 years this nation, as well as the world, has made greater strides toward attaining the ever-longed-for peace than previously in periods 10 times as long.

Women, who give men, who nurse them, mother them, must give their thoughts and energies to this program for international co-operation to prevent war.

Travel Observations and Reflections

BY DR. DUNBAR ROY

Budapest.—The day trip from Trieste to Budapest is 14 hours, but well worth the tedious phases of the journey. By motor it takes two days and two nights, while the roads are by no means good. One passes through the countries of three different nationalities—Italy, Jugo Slavia and Hungaria.

One-half of the trip is through and over a mountain range of unexcelled grandeur. One travels within 40 miles of Goritzia, the famous battlefield and bloody contest between the Austrians and Italians.

The first part of the trip is over a barren country of rocky soil and almost free from any signs of agriculture. As you pass over this range into Jugo-Slavia, the country looks very much like that seen in the region of Deer Park, Md.

In making this trip the inspectors of the three countries are kept very busy in examining tickets and passports. The inspection of baggage amounts to nothing. It keeps the traveler still more busy in trying to understand what these inspectors really want. The Italian and German languages are sufficient for the ordinary traveler, but if one wishes to show great language ability, he will add Jugo-Slavian and Hungarian to his repertoire. The writer has frequently stated that it is a fallacy for American travelers to think that they can travel in comfort with the possession of only the English language.

It seems as if these officials not only have to keep tab on the foreign passenger, but also have to keep a watchful eye on each other. They seem to be suspicious that one might run away with some of the other's territory.

We must remember that at the Versailles round table, Italy received a good slice of territory from Austria. The Slav states which were formed into that of Jugo-Slavia, also received a nice slice of the Hungarian territory. Hence, there is no love shown for each other when these inspectors meet on the frontier lines.

As far as the writer can observe and after talking with people of each of these nationalities, there will always exist a feeling of war-like jealousy. Blood is thicker than water and the ethnic relationship of these nations will always be important.

The Italian language shows a close relationship to the Spanish and French. The Jugo-Slavian looks like the Russian language and their alphabet has the same characteristics. This is true of the Bulgarian, Serbian, Albanian—all the Slav races. Hence, it was that Russia came to the assistance of Serbia, thus precipitating the World War. They are related by blood and language. Hungaria uses the Roman script but their words seem more like those of the Orient. The writer called attention to the fact in previous articles that the language of Finland had a close relationship with the Hungarian.

Austria uses the German language and it was inevitable that Austria and Hungary could never be perfectly amicable when the basic language of the two people was so entirely different.

Hungary, like Finland, is trying to make its own language universally used. While a great many of its people speak German and one can get along very well if he speaks that language, the Hungarian dialect is rapidly becoming the standard language.

To the writer's observation Jugo-Slavia showed by far the most activity in building construction and agricultural progress. Everything had a better appearance. The fields and forests were better kept. The whole country looked like a national park. All the inhabitants appeared to be workers, just like one sees in Germany. The writer predicts that Jugo-Slavia in time will show the greatest economical progress of all the countries in southern Europe.

Jugo-Slavia seems to have great lumber possibilities. All along the railway can be seen numerous saw mills and piles of lumber. Its railway officials appear better dressed, while the inspectors are clean and neat looking. Something that one does not often see in the Italian and Slav countries. Their uniforms are grey with red trimmings. Evidently there is considerable manufacture of pottery if one may judge by the numerous smoking kilns seen here and there.

Budapest is supposed to be one of the most fascinating and interesting cities in Europe. Buda on the right bank of the Danube is joined to Pest on the left side by several magnificent bridges. Right and left in this connection mean that one is looking towards the mouth of the river. Buda is built on the side of a steep mountain slope, while Pest is situated in a perfectly flat country.

The city claims over 1,000,000 inhabitants. Its people seem quite depressed over economic conditions and especially over the large amount of territory. Postcards are given visitors which show graphically the size of Hungary before and after the war. It seems to the writer that this country has suffered more in the loss of everything than any other central European nation. Go into any store and the manager will tell you that Hungarian people have no money and that business is exceedingly poor.

The appearance of the city, certainly indicates this lack of prosperity. Many of their buildings need repair while the shrubbery and grass in the public parks show much need of attention. The taxicabs are small, rickety and mostly of the open variety, indicating a vintage of many years ago.

In spite of all this economic depression the people are lighthearted and gay. The cafes are fairly well crowded although this is not the high season for tourists. A bid is being made for this contingent and like all of Europe, they hope to fall heir to what they believe is American prosperity. Prices are cheap and there is no endeavor to overcharge Americans.

Hungarian music can be heard every night and in almost every place. Fortunately for those who love real music, they hear only the real classic and one is freed from the nervous strain of listening to American jazz. The cymbal, the Hungarian instrument of melody, takes the place of the piano in almost every orchestra. They tell us that only Hungarians know how to make this harpiscord answer the melodies within the soul.

Today the writer was conducted through the king's palace, situated high up on the Buda side overlooking the Danube. This is a relic of those ages when nobility, like kings and queens, ruled the greater part of Europe. Now the main portion of the building is kept in its original state, solely for the purpose of inspection by the wandering tourist. This is one way money is obtained for the government. A part of the building is used for the present administrators.

Hungarians long for a return of their country to the rule of a king. They look for the time when young Prince Otto, the son of their lost king, will be made the ruler of Hungary. He and his mother, Zita, are now in exile in Brussels. These people love their country and their civilization. The gypsy spirit both in their souls and body make them a race of interesting and artistic people.

If People Could Buy Times Would Be Easier

Editor Constitution: That this country is in a bad state is apparent to every thinking and observing man.

When we ask why cotton has fallen in price below a living price of production, we are told that "We are growing too much cotton; that the price is controlled by the 'law of supply and demand'."

This answer is false; cotton is controlled by speculation mainly. Conditions have been brought about of late that only play to the hands of the speculators in controlling cotton prices. This is the thing that the country is up against just now.

The textile mills are running on half-time, because they have more cotton goods manufactured than they can sell, so they must cut down on the volume of the material manufactured. They close down because they can't sell, and that is because the houses handling their goods can't sell. The wholesale houses can't sell because the retail houses can't sell. Why can't they sell to them?

The public does not buy normally because of lack of money. So the trouble is with our money system and not with the "law of supply and demand."

When Wilson was president he caused to be put in operation a banking system that he thought would forever preclude the possibility of such a time as this through which we are passing. But what do we find? Banking institutions shutting off their help to the great enterprises that feed and clothe their millions and lending money to the speculators.

Until money is made more readily available where the common people can get hold of enough of it to transact their little business, conditions will continue as they are. Fifty and one hundred dollars to the little farmer is just as important as the thousands are to the man in his big business. He is a part of the great whole. There are some very small wheels in your watch, but you remove one and see if you do not have to hunt a jeweler. It is a part of the whole piece of machinery.

The present condition can never be permanently corrected until you can get money out where the producing people live. Then they will become the best patrons of the manufacturers who manufacture what they produce. They will buy back their share of all they have grown and sold the manufacturer; but they must have a margin over the producing point, if they do this.

So it's not the number of the bales of cotton that we have grown that has created our present condition. If that were all, it would pay the American people to form societies and buy this surplus and burn it. But this is not our trouble. It is low prices for products grown at a price greater than they will bring with an even break on the market of this day.

Atlantan Suggests Part Time Work To Aid Poor

Editor Constitution: I commend you for the splendid editorial in your Sunday issue, "Our Duty to the Poor."

At the present time we are confronted with facts rather than theories; we are touching elbows with fellow human beings facing suffering and want; we are more concerned in providing relief for suffering humanity than in providing full-time employment for any class or type of workers. Circumstances alter cases. Under the extraordinary conditions prevailing now I advocate

Part time work for all
Rather than full-time work for few
At a time of public crisis
Nothing short of this will do.

When jobs are far between and few,
And jobless men appeal anew,
Let's parcel out the work at hand
A share for each of all the band.

No Quitter

What is the use now to worry,
And what is the use to fret,
Despairing say that times are hard,
Harder than ever was yet!

Whining never makes times better,
Worry just adds to your grief,
Crying just makes your eyes wetter,
Despondency brings no relief.

Buckle your courage up tighter,
Lift up your sad drooping jay,
Show all the world you are a fighter,
Have plenty of "sand in your craw."

Tackle the problem of living,
Cheered on as the hope bell chimes.
Hard times this year in Georgia!
Next year just look for good times.

Baby Has a Tooth

The bells of joy are ringing
In our little house today:
The world is full of gladness,
And our hearts so light and gay;
For our wife has just discovered,
What she vows to be the truth,
And now we are so happy,
For the baby has a tooth!

For many weeks we waited,
And expected this event,
And now forgive our darling
All the sleepless nights we spent;
For there's nothing more exciting
From the baby days to youth,
Than when it first is shouted
That the baby has a tooth!

Let others talks of pleasures
That they had along the way;
Let others sing of places,
Where the heart is light and gay;
But as for me, I'll still contend,
The happiest day forsooth,
Is that when it's first shouted,
That the baby has a tooth!

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle

Not of the same dull stuff as we
Is such a man.
His shining spirit drowns our feeble glow
In whelming splendor of unique content.
All provinces of land and sky and sea
Are his of right,
Things past and greater things to be
Shaped, to his liking, with a just intent
Are spread within his comprehending sight.
Discerning thus
He fashions as a god his mortal vesture
For immortal use and so,
When he at last must go,
With unreluctant gesture
Takes his leave of us
Bereft in planetary night.

Attorney Higdon Quotes Record of "Red Jacket" Case

Editor Constitution: In May, 1928, a luncheon was given in Atlanta to a few of the lawyers and judges of the city in honor of Judge John J. Parker, of the circuit court of appeals. He had made the trip here from Charlotte to deliver an address and by this address and by his personality and bearing he made a profound impression on all who met or heard him.

In making this trip (of course without compensation) and delivering this address, Judge Parker placed the organization which invited him and the city and state under an obligation which any community or state owes to a distinguished visitor. In view of this, I think it but due him and the people of Georgia that they be told the facts involved in the Red Jacket Coal Company case which was made the basis of a large part of the opposition to his confirmation by the senate.

The fight on Judge Parker made that case a cause celebre. He has been charged with having ruled in it "that men, women and children should not receive assistance, food or medicine and further ruled that these men, women and children should not be allowed the service of an undertaker." Referring to the decree in the case, it has been said, "No such rank, inhuman judicial rule was ever issued before or since by any other man on the bench . . . " Since the prestige and authority of a court rest upon the reputation of its judges for integrity, ability and fairness, in justice also to the circuit court of appeals of the fourth circuit the nature of the decree characterized in this language should be made plain. Here are the facts:

In the Red Jacket Coal Company case, coal mine operators in the number of 316 had applied to a federal district court in West Virginia for a restraining order against the United Mine Workers of America to prohibit the interference of the latter with the operation of complainants' mines. Judge George W. McClintic of the district court, granted the following injunction, which is quoted in full as it appears in the report of this case in the 18th Federal Reporter (second series), page 842. The United Mine Workers were enjoined:

"(1). From interfering with the employes of the plaintiffs or with men seeking employment at their mines by menaces, threats, violence or injury to them, their persons, families, or property, or abusing them, or their families, or by doing them violence in any way or manner whatsoever, by doing any other act or thing that would interfere with the right of such employes and those seeking employment to work upon such terms as to them seem proper, unmolested, and from in any manner injuring or destroying the properties of the plaintiffs, or either of them, or from counseling or advising that these plaintiffs should in any way or manner be injured in the conduct and management of their business and in the enjoyment of their property and property rights.

"(2). From trespassing upon the properties of the plaintiffs, or either of them, or by themselves, or in co-operation with others, from inciting, inducing or persuading the employes of the plaintiffs to break their contract of employment with the plaintffs.

"(3). From aiding or assisting any other person or persons to commit or attempt to commit any of the acts herein enjoined.

"(4). From aiding or abetting any person or persons to occupy or hold without right, any house or houses or other property of the plaintiffs, or any of them, by sending money or other assistance to be used by such persons in furtherance of such unlawful occupancy or holding."

From this injunction the United Mine Workers took an appeal to the circuit court of appeals of the fourth circuit, where the case was heard before Judge Edmund Waddill, of Richmond, Va.; Judge John C. Rose (since deceased), of Baltimore, Md., and Judge John J. Parker, of Charlotte, N. C. The decision of the three judges was unanimous in affirming the decree of the district court. Judge Parker wrote the opinion and cited the decision of the supreme court of the United States in Hitchman Coal and Coke Company vs. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, as controlling on the issue of whether or not the United Mine Workers could be restrained "from inciting, inducing or persuading the employes of the plaintiffs to break their contract of employment with the plaintiffs." The only decree or order rendered by the circuit court was that the decree of the district court be affirmed.

The distorted imagination of a communist might find something "inhuman" in the decree approval by the four jurists in this case, but it will hardly appear as such to the average American.

Some day, when national legislation affecting the south is before the supreme court of the United States for a test of its constitutionality, and we find how few of these learned justices have a sympathetic insight into southern ideals and tradition, then we will realize, and not before, the magnitude of the disservice rendered us by our southern senators who defeated Judge Parker's confirmation. Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down, and southerners will long remember the "deep damnation of his taking off."

New Tax System Is Suggested by Talbot

Editor Constitution: I beg to present a just and impartial tax system for Georgia. Every human being alike must have a shelter over his head. If he owns it he suffers the loss of the earnings of his investment. If he uses another he must pay for its use. I would therefore remove taxation of every kind from real estate and its improvements and place a tax on its yield, or income as rents.

The allocation would be made to the state, county and municipality according to their needs and the total rate necessary thereto. The renter to pay as the gasoline tax is paid, but it would be on a percentage based on the dollar rental paid. No homes would therefore ever be sold for taxes.

The confiscatory feature to present taxation on real estate would be removed, thereby encouraging home owning and development of investment properties.

Its adoption would release an army of employes all over the state and make unnecessary many tons of very expensive records and fire proof vaults that now cost the taxpayers a large sum of money.

No very expensive old landmark buildings would again be razed to the ground regretfully to avoid taxation as was done with the old marble mansion on Edgewood avenue in Atlanta recently, and on Peachtree street several years ago.

Greatly reduced rents would immediately follow the removal of the tax hazard and would greatly stimulate Georgia's building program to the delight of the building trades and every business that wants to start again in the direction of profits and away from the long continued depression and losses caused in the main by unjust and inequitable laws.

All existing leases would have to include the tax, but new leases would be drawn less taxes so as not to work an unfairness.

Tourists Throng South Dakota To See Memorial

RAPID CITY, S. D., Aug. 23.—(Special.)—Data gathered by the Chamber of Commerce of Rapid City has revealed that as the result of the rapid progress of the work on the great Mount Rushmore memorial near here, this city is securing favorable publicity appearing in newspapers the combined circulation of which is in excess of 50,000,000 copies per month.

As a result of this magnificent publicity Rapid City has this summer experienced the greatest influx of tourists in its history. Material benefit is thus added to the tremendous civic pride felt by the people of Rapid City over the successful progress of the work which resulted in the unveiling of the head of Washington about a month ago.

It is a matter of especial gratification that the affairs of the memorial have proceeded with as much smoothness as they have. Since the inception of the movement to carve the monster memorial to four of the outstanding presidents of the United States there has not been the slightest friction of any kind, notwithstanding the fact that at one time work had to be suspended for a short period while arrangements were made for securing additional funds for the completion of the carving.

One of the most important features of the splendid publicity obtained by Rapid City as a result of the memorial has been the quarterly magazine published by the national commission in charge of the work. It has been sent free to all premiers, cabinet officers, senators, representatives, members of parliament and deputies of all the governments of the world and to the governors of the various states of this country, foreign consulates and all libraries in American cities of a population of 2,500 or more.

In addition they have furnished a steady income for the memorial, being sold for $1, the sales at the mountain in July amounting to nearly $1,000 dollars. Such corporations as the Standard Oil Company have been liberal advertising patrons of the magazine and one railroad alone bought and distributed 10,000 copies.

Six Days Enough, Says Jack Patterson, Opposing Open Sunday

Editor Constitution: In a communication appearing in The Constitution of Sunday, August 17, William Newton, 296 Alaska avenue, N. E., asserted:

"Most objectors to Sunday afternoon amusements are persons interested in keeping the day according to their own interests. There is no good reason why the majority should be neglected in favor of an inconsequential minority."

For the enlightenment of Mr. Williams and others who are equally interested in celebrating the Sabbath according to their interests, please permit me to quote from a higher and more prominent authority even than Mr. Williams:

"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work. But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested on the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

"Not so, Lord," say the advocates of Sunday baseball and Sunday motion pictures in reply to one of the Ten Commandments delivered to Moses, the great law-giver, on Mt. Sinai, by the Almighty God himself. It may inconvenience Mr. Williams and others desirous of violating the Sabbath day to regard this commandment, but no power on earth has the power to repeal it, and I maintain that the people who have God on their side do not constitute an "inconsequential minority."

All this furor about Atlanta's hotels being depopulated on Sunday because of Georgia's "blue laws" is the rankest kind of unprovable rot, even if some disgruntled traveling man does write an occasional letter to the newspapers. The hotels of no other southern city are more liberally patronized on Sunday.

A Georgia Camp Meeting

Camp meeting time of "long ago,"
When ev'rybody was feeling fine,
Grandfather laughing and talking
Of a promised happy time;
Busy making tents and benches,
Cov'ring the big arbor, too,
Loading wagons, hitching horses—
Ready work for all to do.

For aye and aye to remember,
Cool spring water and the breezes,
Gossiping a little, slyly,
Just as a young fellow pleases!
And such welcome from the people,
Greetings with the folks of old,
Lads and lassies and the babies,
With one's pulses beating bold!

Happy pilgrims grouped together,
Walking churchward, hand in hand,
Singing from time-worn hymn books,
"On Jordan's Stormy Banks I Stand."
And then, "I would not live alway,"
Stirring chords within the soul—
Exhorting sinners to repent,
That "The Lamb may make them whole."

But that bugle bell for dinner
To such tables grandly spread—
Chicken, cake, and pies and pickles,
And delicious home-made bread!
Said the parson, after "blessing,"
While we're giving thanks today,
"Could we share, while we remember,
With friends in distant lands away!"

Old camp-meeting time in Georgia!
Where ev'rybody liked to go,
And enjoy all its blessings—
Best of all, it was free, you know!
When it was over, then the deacons
Shook hands, with love and cheer;
"Brethren, the good Lord willing,
We hope to camp this time next year!"

A Man's Love

Yes, I'm a man and I must laugh
At the mere thought of you,
And when you pass me at the dance
I'll smile at Betty Lou;
For though I see another's arms
About your precious form,
I'll let the music's lilting strain
Assuage my grief's wild storm.

And memory, demon that it is,
Shall play no pranks with me;
I'll be no servile slave to it—
My will shall make me free,
Nor would I drown you out with drink,
For I'm a man, my dear,
And only God shall ever know
Of my heart's hidden tear.

Was Tobacco Committee On Co-operation Put to Sleep?

Editor Constitution: With interest I have read the press discussions of the Georgia tobacco market, including your editorials, and the contribution by Congressman Lankford and others. Doubtless the reading public served by The Constitution has likewise been watchfully interested.

Several weeks before the date set for the opening of the Georgia tobacco market, Vice President Stone, of the federal farm board, voiced the advice to farmers to organize for the systematic handling of their crops, which was inclusive of tobacco. A meeting was advertised and held in a centrally located tobacco marketing town. Some 3,000 farmers gathered for the occasion. Several talks were made along the line of advantages to be derived from organization and along toward the close of the session when an opportunity was given, that group of farmers stood 100 per cent in favor of the plan. The chairman was authorized to appoint a committee, and that committee was in turn to take steps toward an organization, but somewhere between that occasion and the organization that committee must have been chloroformed and put to sleep, for nothing more has been heard of it.

Days passed and the Georgia tobacco market opened. The price was low. The price was unsatisfactory. Farmers who had worked themselves and their families under the burning rays of a matchlessly hot summer sun by day, and also through nights that never grew cool, were hurt—they ached in their hearts over the price. No one knew the sweat, the labor, the sacrifice, the hope concealed in the tobacco crop as he who had grown it by the sweat of his own brow. In no few instances farmers gathered up the tobacco receipts and walked out unable to settle their fertilizer notes, much less buy friend wife a new gingham dress and the baby a dime's worth of stick candy.

Various congressmen, senators, agricultural commissioner and a representative of the federal farm board held a meeting over in Savannah.

They resolved to "investigate." Farmers wanted price, not investigation. Mr. Talmadge advised farmers to cart their tobacco to Carolina, but they wisely did not do it.

Mr. Brantley, of Blackshear, seems to place the blame for low prices upon the farmers for having not graded and tied their tobacco. May I ask why the tobacco that was graded and tied did not sell for any more than that left ungraded and loose?

The truth is, Georgia produced a wonderful crop of tobacco this year and it is being marketed for less than ever before in the history of its commercial culture in this state. Further, the weather has been ideal during the season and farmers have sought to sell their tobacco as advised.

But they do not yet understand why tobacco sold so cheap, when more cigarets are being consumed than ever before and prices of cigarets not reduced.

Do you suppose that farmers can ever hope to win in a game when the other fellow holds both ends of the rope?

Feels American Home Losing Its Security

Editor Constitution: Permit me to commend you for the timely editorial on the shooting of two men Sunday night in Meriwether county by federal prohibition enforcement officers. The conditions surrounding this shooting would indicate that it was unnecessary and the conduct of the officers appears to have been such as to justify serious punishment and dismissal from the service, especially is this true when one of the offenders, W. K. Johnson, Jr., is at this time under indictment for killing a young man in Columbus under conditions that are very questionable.

At the rate these fellows are going, life and liberty of the average American home lose their significance, and there remains no place that these men, armed with a petty warrant, can't go. If resistance is offered they simply p

CRISP POWER BODY ISSUES STATEMENT

Denies It Seeks To Confiscate Georgia Power Company in That County.

CORDELE, Ga., Aug. 23.—Hand in the electric power rate "war" between the Crisp county-owned hydro-electric plant and the Georgia Power Company has been taken by the state.

The county-owned power plant, the first of its sort in the United States, which was opened only three weeks ago was built at a cost of $1,250,000, funds being secured by a bond issue.

Wednesday the Georgia Power Company which had served the community prior to the opening of the local plant, announced a cut in rates within the city of Cordele, bringing the price 25 per cent below the cost of the county distributed power.

The Georgia public service commission stepped in quickly and issued an order commanding the Georgia Power Company to show cause why the rates offered in Cordele should not be applicable to approximately 100 other communities which the company serves in Georgia.

P. S. Arkwright, president of the Georgia Power Company, issued a statement in which he charged that the Crisp county authorities were using unfair tactics in extending local service to Cordele customers. He declared the slashing of Cordele rates was made "imperative by the prior action of Cordele municipal authorities in cutting our rates, their deliberate purpose being to destroy our business in Cordele."

Denies Mr. Arkwright's Statements

In commenting to newspapermen here today with reference to the rate fight recently inaugurated by the Georgia Power Company, W. H. Dorris, representing the Crisp county power commission, in answer to the charges made by P. S. Arkwright, president of the Georgia Power Company, and apeparing in today's Atlanta papers, makes the following statement:

"Mr. Arkwright's assertion that the 50 per cent cut rate put in Cordele August 19 was made imperative by the prior action of the Crisp county commission authorities, with the deliberate purpose of destroying the power company's business in Cordele is without foundation. On the contrary, the whole movement on the part of Crisp county to build its own hydroelectric plant originated in a protest against prohibitive and exorbitant rates of the serving power company adverse to the interest of Cordele and Crisp county.

"The further charges of Mr. Arkwright that the property of the Georgia Power Company is sought to be confiscated by the Cordele authorities is likewise unfounded. No confiscation of their property has been at any time intended by Crisp county.

Says Company Would Not Purchase.

"The company heretofore serving Cordele has declined to consider any offer on the part of the commission of Cordele to purchase their Cordele holdings.

"The files of the Cordele city commission show that in 1928 an offer was made by the city commission to the serving power company at Albany, Ga., to enter into a discussion of price and terms on the property of said company in Cordele. The serving power company declined to negotiate. In addition to this, a committee from the Cordele city commission went to Albany in person with a view of negotiating a purchase of their transmission lines and holdings and they declined to give it any consideration.

Seek to Use Natural Resources.

"With reference to the further charge that Crisp county sought to take their business, it can truthfully be said that Cordele and Crisp county have not invaded the field of the power company, but they have sought to utilize their natural resources for their own benefit that were given to the power company for many years, and especially for the last seven years since the Crisp county power plant has been under consideration and construction. In 1923 the company heretofore serving Cordele sought to obtain from the city commissioners a franchise, and they were told that no consideration would be given to the granting of a franchise until the serving company had submitted a schecule of rates not adverse to the interest of the community.

"A schedule of rates was submitted to the commissioners, whereupon they declined to grant the franchise for the reason that the schedule of rates was not satisfactory and since that time Cordele has been buying electric energy at the same price it paid under an expired contract. Since a definite movement was put on foot to build a county-owned electric plant, the former exorbitant rates have from time to time been greatly reduced.

Have Not Used Social Pressure.

"It is untrue that the city officials have brought political and social pressure to bear in securing business, as is charged by Mr. Arkwright. There has not been a single cut-in or meter installed in a residence or business house in Cordele by the Crisp county power commission except upon previous written request of the owner, said written request being issued from the office of the Georgia Power Company.

"No unfair tactics have been employed by the city of Cordele dealing with the company heretofore serving Cordele; nothing has been done by Cordele or Crisp county in contravention to the state constitutional provisions defining the rights of Cordele and Crisp county. No pre-emption of a field of business to which the Georgia Power Company has exclusive vested rights has been in any instance undertaken. It is not admitted by Cordele or Crisp county that the Georgia Power Company has any such rights.

The action of the Georgia Power Company is having an effect on public sentiment exactly opposite from what was expected by the power company officials."

Ex-State Senator W. H. Dorris, who spoke for the Crisp County Power Company commission, is one of the best known citizens of Cordele and was a prime mover in the program that resulted in the erection of the publicly owned plant.

Mr. Dorris was largely instrumental in gaining the legislative enactment authorizing a county bond issue to build the plant on the Flint river, and has been active in furthering its interests since the opening of the plant on August 1.

NEGRO METHODISTS MEET IN CEDARTOWN

CEDARTOWN, Ga., Aug. 23.—The district conference, church school and Epworth league joint convention of the Rome district Negro Methodist Episcopal church is in session here. Professor W. A. Robinson, of Rome, and Dr. C. L. Johnson, district superintendent of the Rome district, are in charge.

Round table discussions on the industrial and economic conditions of the country, in which negroes were urged "to go back to the farms" featured Friday's program.

Reports revealed that the conference was in good financial condition.

One Church Served 44 Years By Clarke County Preacher

ATHENS, Ga., Aug. 23.—Rev. W. M. Coile, Clarke county man, has disproved the belief that people soon grow tired of a preacher. He helped organize the Winterville Baptist church and has been its pastor for 44 years.

The church celebrates its 44th anniversary this week with a revival service conducted by Dr. W. H. Faust, native of Oglethorpe county, now pastor of the Gordon Street Baptist church, Atlanta.

The Rev. Mr. Coile has been in the Baptist ministry 48 years, spending all but four of those years ministering to the Winterville church, but helping to organize and build 15 churches. He has been pastor of the following churches: Dove's Creek, Bethany, Maysville, Commerce, Nicholson, Attica, Jefferson, Winder, Bogart, Hull, Comer, Danielsville, Watkinsville, Winterville, Salem, Arnoldsville, Bowman, Antioch, Bairdstown, Stevens Grove, Sandy Cross and Coile Grove. His two longest pastorates were 19 years at Antioch and 44 years at Winterville.

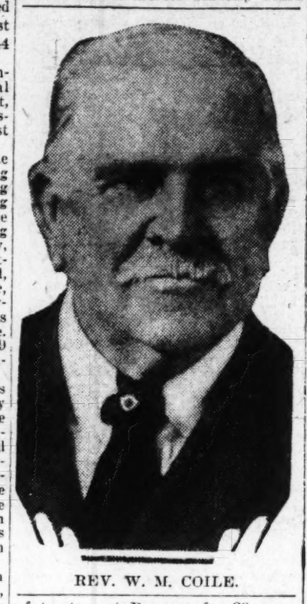

Mr. Coile has seen many customs pass away since he began the ministry and has witnessed the change in the attitude of the people toward denominationalism. When he first entered the ministry the rivalry between denominations was so intense that doctrinal arguments often became the foundation of bitter animosities. There is a greater feeling of comity between the members of various denominations today, he believes, and more unity on the essentials of religion.

The Winterville minister was born in Madison county, February 11, 1854, and was ordained to the ministry at Moore's Grove church in Clarke county in January, 1882. His first pastorates were Dove's Creek church, in Elbert county, and Bethany, in Oglethorpe county.

While preaching has been his chief business during all these years Mr. Coile has also been interested in other affairs of life. He has always operated farms, and knows as much or more about farming than his members, who live in one of the best farming communities in the state. Perhaps their preacher's practical knowledge of their manner of livelihood has enabled him to better appreciate the problems of the church members and so fitted him to more fully sympathize with them in a bad crop year sets their nerves on edge.

He has also been interested in the educational end of farming and has been one of the mainstays of the vocational agriculture courses and experiments at the Winterville school, giving encouragement to the teachers and the pupils as well.

His interest in education has led him to serve on various educational boards, including the Clarke county board of education, of which he has been a member since 1905, and chairman since 1910. He was a member of the Winterville board of education when he was elected by the grand jury of Clarke to the county board when he resigned the Winterville office. He was for a number of years a member of the Baptist board of education and a member and chairman of the Gibson-Mercer academy board of trustees at Bowman for 20 years or more, serving on that body until Bowman bought the school from the Baptists and converted it into a high school.

In 1875 Mr. Coile taught school at old Rehoboth church in Goshen district, Elbert county, and also taught at Winterville and old Moore's Grove. Mr. Coile graduated from the University of Georgia in 1883 with the A. B. degree, having entered the univeristy in 1871 through the mediation of two Athens women, "Aunt Tish" McClain and Mrs. Williams Rutherford, the former the aunt of the late W. D. O'Farrell, and the latter "Miss Millie's" mother.

Although he is 76 years of age, few younger men could chop a cord of wood as easily or more quickly than Mr. Coile today, and many of his younger brothers in the ministry would probably give anything to learn from him the secret of remaining in one place nearly a half century. His never-failing good humor, his knowledge and insistence upon practical religion are perhaps two keys to this secret, and account in large measure for the popularity which led his congregation last Christmas to leave at his front door a brand-new automobile, a gift from not only those he then served as pastor, but members of other churches he has served, indicating that he didn't leave them because they thought he ought to.

Deep and Abiding Doctrine of Faith Characterizes Church Book of 1817

BY MRS. C. B. McCULLAR.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., Aug. 23. Quaint old names that suggest Puritan ancestry, a rigid code of morality, and a deep and abiding doctrine of faith, characterize the church book dating from 1817 that was brought to Milledgeville this week by W. H. Ivey, so that Mrs. David Ferguson, Baldwin historian, might have access to it for the history she is writing of this county.

The deed for the two-acre lot bought by the church from Joseph Collins for $10 is pasted in the front of the book. The church now owns nine acres of land.

Many old negro slaves, as devout in their religion as any whites, have their names inscribed as members of the old church. None of the negro members seem to have had surnames, as are listed only as "Mollie, colored woman," and "Zachariah, colored man."

Discipline was rigid in those days, as is shown in the minutes that describe many of the members being required to offer in public their reasons for non-attendance at worship or at conference.

Founding of Church.

Characteristically quaint and simply worded is the opening paragraph telling of the founding of the church: "We, the members composing the Camp Creek Baldwin County Church of Christ of the Baptist denomination, having voluntarily and freely given ourselves to the Lord and to one another to live together in a house of God and to watch over each other in love, believing it to be right and acceptable with Him that we should assemble ourselves together as often as convenient to worship Him.

The duties of the members are laid down rigidly, followed by 12 "Articles of Faith." The names subscribed to these founding minutes number 40 from whose families have come many of the important men and women in Georgia.

The names are: James Herndon, Sylvia Herndon, Joseph Irwin, Nancy Taylor, Patience Irwin, Lucretia Clark, Jincy Dean, Nimrod Fergerson, John H. Smith, Celia Smith, Zechariah Chambliss, Nancy Chambless, Reuben Alridge, Sarah and Concord Aldridge, Gatcy Ivey, Elinor Joiner, Stephen Gafford, Melinda Belcher, Sarah, a colored woman; Solomon Ogdon, Rebecca Ogdon, Robert Ivey, Eliazbet Ivey, Jennette Irwin, Nancy Ivey, Henry Hand, Benjamin Cooper, Fanny, a colored woman; George Leaves, John Sharp, Susannah Sharp, Eden Taylor, Richard Green, Mary Hickman, Mary Davis, Nancy Cooper, John Rutherford, Richard Ellis and Absolom Black.

Exactly 100 years of minutes are contained between the yellow pages of the old book. The last entry is of May, 1917, exactly 100 years from the entry of the first minutes. The hand that entered the minutes of the last entry was the third generation from the fine Spencerian hand that entered in stately penmanship the story of the banding together of the 38 whites and two negroes for the founding of the church.

Godly Community.

The years in between tell the story of a godly community that tucked away among the quiet old hills of Baldwin county has put God first and has taken seriously its religion. The spirit pervading the little community today is not far different from the spirit that pervaded the little pioneer band of other days.

Will H. Ivey, great-grandson of the Robert Ivey whose name is listed in the charter roll, has charge of the aged old book now, and the care that he bestows upon it gives ample evidence of the tenderness with which this treasure of their forefathers is regarded by the children of these founders of a church.

The curious and almost forgotten custom of writing and receiving "corresponding letters" from other churches, of exchanging with other communities ideas for a better religious life, is recalled in the pages of the old book. In April, 1853, "correspondents were appointed in this conference for the sister churches." The entries are reminiscent of the Apostle Paul and his famous "Letters to the Churches."

That the little church has kept up the habit of "looking after one another in love," as first laid down in the minutes, is indicated by the tender note of regret and grief, which is the last sentence in the book, "It bereaves the church for the death of our sister, Josie Brown, who had been a faithful member for many years." That last was the highest tribute they could pay her; she had been a faithful member for many years.

The little church is still flourishing, its acreage has more than quadrupled, and its membership grows each year.

W. A. Simpson, Henry County Farmer, Grows 2 Bales Per Acre

BY MRS. HUGH TURNER.

McDONOUGH, Ga., Aug. 23.—W. A. Simpson, of Henry county, is a successful farmer. Mr. Simpson attributes his success to careful planning months in advance of planting and a system of practical diversification.

In speaking of this system, Mr. Simpson says, "I always plan to have food stuff and feed. I plant 100 acres of corn for every 150 acres of cotton. I grow wheat enough for my flour. Although I did not plant any wheat this year I am just buying my first sack of flour. I have chickens, hogs and cows. My vineyard and home orchard produce all I need for my home use."

In addition to this home orchard, Mr. Simpson has an orchard of 30 acres planted in Elberta peach trees, from which he has shipped 19 cars this year. These peaches were a source of profit and even in lean years have always paid whatever expense has been attached to their production.

Mr. Simpson is a pioneer in the pimento pepper raising in this county. He has only three acres in this crop. This is an unusually small planting due to his failure to get enough plants. Mr. Simpson says, "I like to grow peppers. They have netted $100 an acre and are more profitable than cotton."

Last year Mr. Simpson produced 2 bales of cotton per acre on 10 acres. This year he has 5 acres planted under the direction of Harvey Jordan, president of the American Cotton Association, and expects to have a similar yield. Mr. Simpson operates, together with his sons, an 18-horse crop. His soil is gray, sandy loam.

He is expecting to investigate the question of tobacco culture in this county.

To talk with Mr. Simpson is to get a vision of prosperity for Georgia—a vision of the fruits of independence, industry and intensive farming.

Arrived and Sailed.

Mercury Nears Record Low for August

THOMASVILLE, Ga., Aug. 23.—According to United States weather bureau observer, O. M. Hadley, stationed in Thomasville, the mercury during the cool spell that has prevailed here for the past three days, has come within one degree of being as low as ever recorded in August, during the 40 years there has been a station here. The minimum of 62 was reached, and this has only been beaten in August, 1908, when the thermometer dropped to a minimum of 61 degrees.

Brooks County.

QUITMAN, Ga., Aug. 23.—Schools all over this county will open for the fall term September 15. Superintendent W. J. Cooey and the county school board last year kept within their budget and operated the schools seven months, despite the cramping conditions caused by the delinquency of the state, which owes the county school fund $25,000 past due and the Quitman schools $5,000.

Superintendent Cooey said if the state would pay its 1928-29 debt to the county it would create a nice cash balance after obligations are paid off. This year's high spot in school progress will be getting Barney and Dixie consolidated schools on the accredited list of high schools. These two schools have worked for several years very hard to achieve this. The county will then have four accredited high schools besides the Quitman school, which will give girls and boys in all parts of the county access to the high schools.

Superintendents of the county high schools are: Barwick, J. J. Brock, of Vidalia; Morven, T. D. Akins, of Manassas; Barney, W. H. Reberg, of Cairo, who was principal of the Morven school last year; Dixie, Allen C. Smith, of Decatur, re-elected here for the fourth year. J. Harold Saxon will continue as superintendent of the Quitman schools.

Elam-Hickory Head consolidated schools have just completed a new building. J. L. Graham, state school supervisor, was at Dixie last week to make plans for an additional classroom which will be built immediately. The negroes at Morven have completed a model Rosenwald rural school. The qualifications of teachers are higher than at any time in the history of the schools.

Wins $50 in Prizes for First Cotton Bale

H. H. Hill, of Oconee county (left), who won prizes valued at $50 for selling in Athens (Ga.) the first bale of this season's cotton. The cotton was made on land owned by W. T. Haygood, Atlanta, shown in picture. Other prizes are being offered by Athens for the first bales of cotton sold there from various divisions of the district. Mr. Hill said he planted in March, which always assures an early crop and prevents the cotton from being killed in May. By that time it has toughened.

TOBACCO GROWERS MAP PLANS FOR 1931

THOMASVILLE, Ga., Aug. 23.—Despite the discouraging results from the low prices for tobacco this season, plans are already under way for building up a larger market next year in Thomasville and many of the growers have expressed themselves as resolved to plant the leaf again.

Some of them have made a modest profit from the 1930 crop, where their tobacco was of fine quality. A man over in the Sales City section, J. E. Bridges, has been quoted as saying he got an average of around $16 per hundred for his crop and cleared about $1,000 on a six-acre patch.

One Thomasville bank official stated that farmers who are being carried financially by his institution will plant tobacco again next year: that he will insist that they plant, but plant only so much as they can easily care for, without neglecting other crops, and which can be cultivated and marketed entirely by the members of the grower's family, without depending on hired labor. "And I am going to 'insist'," he said, "that the women of the family do the grading." "Everyone ought to know that a woman can grade and match better than a man," he explained. A woman can match any sort of cloth to a gnat's heel," he added, "but who ever saw a man that could match cloth? And women can grade and match the tobacco just as accurately as they do the cloth."

Lessees of the local warehouse plan to return here in 1931. They want to be on the ground when the tobacco is planted, stay with the growers while they cultivate and cure and give them advice and aid during the entire period. Many growers, they say, have used the wrong sort of seed and numbers have over-fertilized, thereby necessitating an unnecessary amount of work and added expense to get out an inferior grade of leaf.

HABITS OF PRAWN WILL BE STUDIED

BRUNSWICK, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP) W. W. Anderson, marine biologist of Louisiana, will arrive here about September 1 to make a survey of the habits of prawn that live in the waters along the Georgia coast.

Appointment of Mr. Anderson for the survey was made several days ago by Peter S. Twitty, state game and fish commissioner.

The force and equipment of the tidewater department located here will be at Mr. Anderson's disposal. He will spend the first few days organizing his forces before starting the survey that is expected to take about a year to complete.

An old controversy that the survey may settle is whether the nets of prawn fishermen destroy the game fish in salt water streams.

The survey follows action of the state game and fish commission at a recent meeting here when it was decided to ask the aid of the federal government in the work.

Mr. Twitty was told by authorities in Washington that the government did not have a man familiar with the habits of prawn but would co-operate with the state in obtaining a man and Mr. Anderson was recommended.

The prawn survey will be independent of an oyster survey also to be conducted along the Georgia coast.

PEANUT PLANTERS WILL HEAR GEORGE

MOULTRIE, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—United States Senator Walter F. George will be the principal speaker at a meeting of peanut growers here next Thursday.

Senator George, himself a large grower of peanuts, has made an intensive study not only of the growing but the marketing of the crop. His address will be of interest to all farmers, especially those engaged in peanut growing.

Senator George's bill to require statistics on the stock of peanuts on hand by dealers, shellers and others, with the exception of growers, which passed the senate at the last regular session, will enable growers to determine the acreage to plant, year by year, and will also enable those handling the marketing to correctly judge supply and demand and regulate prices accordingly.

The George bill is to be considered by the house in December, and President Ladson, of the Peanut Growers' Co-operative Marketing Association, sponsoring the meeting Thursday, said it was expected the measure would pass by a substantial vote.

Invitations have been sent to Congressmen Cox, Crisp and Lankford, Dr. A. M. Soule, president of the State College of Agriculture, and J. Phil Campbell, director of extension work at the state college, and other interested officials to attend the meeting here.

President Ladson said the meeting would be called to order at the courthouse here at 11 o'clock, eastern standard time.

BOILER EXPLOSION CLAIMS 3D VICTIM

SYLVANIA, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—The toll of an explosion at a Hunter's Station cotton gin yesterday was increased to three today with the death of Lonnie Overstreet, a negro, of Statesboro, Ga.

L. S. Jarrell, a farmer, and Thomas Jones, negro fireman, were killed in the explosion.

E. L. Pretorious, owner of the gin, injured by flying debris, was reported in a critical condition in a Statesboro hospital today.

Nevill Bazemore and McCoy Bazemore were also injured but are expected to recover.

The explosion was said to have been caused by the turning of cold water into the boiler while the steam was high.

MYSTERIOUS MALADY FATAL TO GEORGIAN

J. R. Wilcox, Albany Dog Breeder, Succumbs in Hospital.

ALBANY, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—An unusual illness which puzzled physicians for three weeks Saturday brought death to J. R. Wilcox, president of the Hew Kennel Company here, and widely known as a dog breeder and manufacturer of dog foods and medicines.

Mr. Wilcox's illness came after he had taken 18 of the prescribed 21 treatments of rabies vaccine after being bitten by a dog. Sometime after he had taken the treatments he began to suffer from paralysis that gradually extended over his body. His illness refused to respond to treatment and physicians were unable to diagnose his case definitely.

The kennel company president came here six years ago from Hawkinsville, where funeral services will be held Monday afternoon. Besides Mrs. Wilcox; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Wilcox, of Tampa, and one brother, L. M. Wilcox, of Temperance, Ga., survive.

LEAF SALES AVERAGE $7 HUNDRED POUNDS

VALDOSTA, Ga., Aug. 23.—Friday's tobacco sales were 343,756 pounds for $21,796.36, an average of about $7. The grade was poor, mostly tips.

Sales will continue during the coming week, three major warehouses remaining open and the regular two sets of buyers continuing on duty as long as there is tobacco remaining in this section to be marketed.

DOUGLAS, Ga., Aug. 23.—Official warehouse figures Douglas tobacco market for this week's sales ending Friday afternoon 3,784,59 pounds, bringing $272,983.78 or a general average of $7.21 per hundred. Official sales for this entire season ending Friday 12,954,406 pounds at a general average price of $9.83 per hundred. This will show Douglas market still in the lead in poundage over all other Georgia markets.

The Douglas market this season has been drawing tobacco from all tobacco growing counties in the state. The market here will be the last to close, and will finish one day next week, or as soon as all the Georgia tobacco is sold.

212 BOYS, AGENTS ATTEND 4-H CAMP

21 Counties Represented at Athens During Past Week.

BY TURNER M. HIERS.

ATHENS, Ga., Aug. 23.—Two hundred and twelve Georgia 4-H Club boys and county agents were in attendance at this week's Camp Wilkins, state camp for club boys and girls, according to A. S. Bussey, director.

Cecil Shadburn, of Bibb county, was elected chairman of the leader boys during the week which closed Saturday. Two or three outstanding club boys from each county, known as leader boys because of the proven qualities of leadership, are selected to assist the director of the camp during the week's short course. Cecil is a member of the executive committee of the Georgia Association of Future Farmers of America. He also won a free trip to Washington, D. C., year before last by doing excellent club work.

The most important duty of the leader boys, better known among the boys as "Kangaroo Court," is to enforce discipline at the camp. As any member of the camp conducts himself in an ungentlemanly manner, the court composed of camp boys passes sentence upon him. The plan has worked well at the camp this summer, according to G. V. Cunningham, state boys' club agent.

Two other boys, Harold Tyner, of Bibb county, and Jethro Duncan, of Wayne county, who have been attending camp this week, have distinguished records in leadership. Tyner, because of his high qualities of leadership, last year was awarded a free trip to a camp at Springfield, Mass., while Duncan won a free trip to Washington, D. C., for the same kind of work.

Historic Soil Sent By State University For Memorial Tree

ATHENS, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—A pound of dirt with a history left Athens today for Kansas City, Mo.

The dirt requested by Mrs. Margaret N. McClure, president of the Kansas chapter of the American War Mothers, will be used to nurture a tree to be planted on the campus of the University of Missouri as a memorial to alumni and students of that institution who lost their lives in the World War.

The dirt was shipped by Chancellor C. M. Snelling, of the University of Georgia, the oldest chartered state university in the world. It was dug from the foundation of the oldest building on the campus, which is a reproduction of the oldest building on the Yale campus, Connecticut hall. It was taken from directly underneath the room occupied as classmates by Georgia's two representatives of the national hall of fame, Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Confederate States of America and Dr. Crawford W. Long, discoverer of the use of ether as an anaesthetic.

Mrs. McClure, who is seeking a pound of dirt from the campus of every state university in the country, asked that the sod be dug from some historical spot. It was.

SOUTH BALDWIN GAS INJUNCTION ENDED

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., Aug. 23. The injunction granted by Judge James B. Park, of the Ocmulgee superior court circuit early in the week, enjoining the Southern Natural Gas Corporation from crossing lands of farmers of the Camp Creek community in south Baldwin county was dismissed Saturday upon agreement.

The farmers alleged in their petition for injunction that the gas company, which is laying a pipe line between Macon and Milledgeville, were crossing their farms and damaging their crops without paying for the privilege and for the damages sustained. Judge Park granted a temporary injunction and set a date for a permanent hearing at Madison on September 1. However, the gas company offered to settle by paying for the privilege of crossing the land in question and the injunction was dismissed and the litigation ended.

The farmers were represented by Attorneys McCullar and McCullar, of Milledgeville, and the gas company by Attorney Erwin Sibley, of Milledgeville.

VALDOSTA BOY'S DEATH STILL BEING PROBED

VALDOSTA, Ga., Aug. 23.—According to information from the office of G. C. Spurlin, solicitor-general of the southern circuit, an investigation into the death of Stanford Cothron, white youth in the Ousley district, last April, is still being made.

Tobe Folsom, Jelks Crosby and Claud Adams were indicted for murder in connection with the death, and recently Folsom was tried and acquitted by a jury, leaving the cases against the others yet to be disposed of. The solicitor-general is of the opinion that the continued investigation will result in additional evidence and he hopes to have the cases ready for trial at the November term of the superior court.

Three New Industries Benefited.

The adoption of Lowndes county this week of the privilege of exempting new industries from taxation for a period of five years, comes just in time to benefit three new ones just erecting plants now.

Valdosta adopted the law by a vote of the people several years ago and last fall a movement was started to get the county to do the same. Two grand juries in succession authorized the ordinary to call an election, which was held this week. In the county 153 voters favored the movement and a total of 18 voted against it.

The small vote, out of a total registration of more than 2,000 showed that there was practically no opposition to the plan, the greater portion of these favoring it believeing it would carry anyway, did not take the trouble to vote.

Explains Canal Project.

E. Lee Worsham, secretary of the Ocean-to-Gulf canal, planned across portions of north Florida and south Georgia, spent Friday in the city conferring with those who are interested in furthering the project.

The congress has already by a resolution authorized a survey to be made by the war department and plans for beginning this survey are already being made by the engineering department of the army.

At the session of the legislature last year the canal movement was officially recognized and a canal commission created, of which Mr. Worsham is the executive secretary. The Georgia commission and a similar one created in Florida work in close harmony with each other and just at this time, without being able to divulge the exact plans, real progress is being made toward getting a survey commenced within a very reasonable time.

Columbus' Fight for Modern River Transportation Revives Stories of Steamboat Days on Chattahoochee

Above: Steamboat "W. C. Bradley" headed down river for Apalachicola, Fla. Right: "Fanny Fearn," noted for speed and graceful lines.

Heroism of Youthful Frank Lapham When "Rebecca Everingham" Burned at Fitzgerald's.

BY GLENN RAMSEY.

COLUMBUS, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—While Columbus and tributary territory in both Alabama and Georgia are centering their efforts to obtain locks and dams and self-propelled barges on the Chattahoochee river, old-timers are recalling interesting stories of the old steamboat days. Before and after the Civil War, steamboats by the half dozen or more plied the Chattahoochee from Columbus to Apalachicola, Florida.

Indeed, until the coming of the railroad, river transportation was virtually the only mode of traveling for residents along the stream and was profitable in the hauling of cotton and provisions for the huge plantations bordering along the river.

Tragedy stalked the river boats and passengers. In October, 1865, Captain Wingate, a resident of Eufaula, Ala., one of the important cities on the Chattahoochee, piloted the trim steamer Alice. On a down-stream trip the boat struck a snag and tore a big hole in her hull. Captain Wingate rushed below with pillows and blankets to stop the inflow of water and never returned alive.

On April 1, 1833, another steamer, the George W. Wiley, struck a bridge at Fort Gaines and went to pieces. The boat sank within less than 30 minutes, carrying 12 persons to death.

Heroism of Frank Lapham.

A year later, April 4, 1864, the Rebecca Everingham was burned to the water's edge at Fitzgerald's landing, above Florence, Ga. Frank Lapham, a strike pilot, at the wheel with his father, was the hero of the disaster. He jumped into the water with a line and made it fast to the burning boat and the shore. Several persons were drowned, however, and some of the bodies never recovered.

One of the many favorite boats on the Chattahoochee during the river's heyday of usefulness was the Amos Hays. The boat was built in Indiana in 1883 and was a favorite with the shippers at Eufaula and Columbus as well as passengers.

On her maiden trip up the river from Apalachicola in August of 1883, her peculiar whistle broke up a negro camp meeting near Columbia, Ala. The negroes stampeded, crying "A wild panther is after us." The whistle created so many sensations that the Amos Hays disposed of it.

Palatial "Chattahoochee" Too Big.

The finest steamer ever to ply the waters of the stream was the palatial "Chattahoochee," built in 1880. She was much too large for Chattahoochee river service and was transferred to the St. John's river in Florida.

The steamers "Fanny Fearn" and "Ruth" were brought from the Mobile river, in Alabama, to the Chattahoochee to carry cotton to Mobile via Appalachicola, from Columbus and Eufaula compresses.

The "Fanny Fearn," which was a speedy and graceful boat, had Captain Latamore as master. He lived in Eufaula. Captain J. Allen Lovelace was master of the "Ruth" and is now superintendent of the largest harbor company at Tampa, Fla. Captain Lovelace was originaly from Columbus.

In 1870 and for years later, the freight traffic on the river was profitable. Thousands of bales of cotton were transported from Columbus and other points on the stream to New Orleans and Savannah. From 1870 to 1875 there was a through water rate from Eufaula to New Orleans and Mobile. The cotton rate was $1.50 per bale.

The Alabama Midland railroad and other rail lines, tapping the river below Eufaula, ended the profitable operations of the river lines and the cotton compress at Eufaula, then one of the largest in the south, went out of business.

Mr. Bradley Interested in Steamboats

W. C. Bradley, one of the state's most influential men and with interests throughout the country, being chairman of the board of the Coca-Cola Company, purchased the remaining water line in 1903. One of the boats, which was named the "W. C. Bradley," later struck a snag in low water and could not be salvaged.

Mr. Bradley's interests along the stream were varied and he operated the line chiefly for himself. Later he sold his grocery business in Eufaula and the Chattahoochee water transportation business went out of existence.

The glories of the steamboat as a mode of transportation have gone, probably never to return, but there still remains in the memory of many its past success. And today, the Chattahoochee valley is fighting what seems to be a successful battle for the development of the river along modern lines, which means locks and dams and self-propelled barges.

Warm Springs Hatchery Comprises 19 Ponds, Water Area of 12 Acres

WARM SPRINGS, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—The importance of Warm Springs as a health resort has been widely propagandized by Governor Franklin Roosevelt, of New York, and others, but little has been said of the big government fish hatchery which supplies two-thirds of the calls for restocking streams in Georgia and Alabama.

The Warm Springs hatchery was established by the federal government in 1899. Today it comprises 19 ponds, with a water area of 10 to 12 acres.

The ponds are arranged scientifically, with each on a slight elevation descending toward a valley. They are easily reached by concrete sidewalks that run around the edges of all the ponds.

Water is supplied to the pools at the rate of 1,800 gallons per minute from a spring, on the north; another gives 1,100 gallons per minute and a third 900 gallons. The water is of a high degree of purity and is at a desirable temperature for fish culture. Underground tile lines carry the water to the ponds.

Three species of fish are propagated at Warm Springs, according to Charles A. Bullock, superintendent of the station. These are big mouth bass, bream and speckled catfish. Bass spawn in March and often two or three times in a season; catfish spawn in April, once a season, while bream spawn in April and each month from April to October.

The young fish are supplied to anyone making application to the federal bureau of fisheries, if conditions concerning the need for the fish are met. About all the applicant needs, however, is to have suitable water, private or public stream, or pond.

The railroads co-operate in the shipping of fish. When the schools of young fish are collected in sufficient numbers to make a shipment of 20 ten-gallon cans, these will be carried free by the railroad as baggage when accompanied by a passenger with one first-class ticket.

In transit the messenger, or the one accompanying the fish on the first-class ticket, is to care for the fish. He has a supply of ice and from time to time places small pieces in the water of the cans to maintain a uniform temperature. Fresh oxygen is also supplied by dipping water from the cans and pouring it back again. Very few fish are lost in transportation due to the scientific attention given them by the messenger.

400,000 Annual Output.

The output of bass at the Warm Springs station is approximately 400,000 annually. The propagation of bream is approximately 150,000 per season, with catfish about 15,000 a season. The propagation is based solely upon the demands of the public.

Since its establishment the hatchery at Warm Springs has continued to grow with the increased demand for fish from the two states served. Another station is now being built at Valdosta to supplement the station here and when it is completed will have 300 acres of propagating waters.

It is the aim of the department of commerce through the bureau of fisheries to have every adequate stream, lake and pond, whether private or public, stocked with fish, and the Warm Springs station is filling a vital need in carrying out that program.

The Warm Springs station is located on the paved road between Warm Springs and Manchester in Meriwether county.

Dipped Tail First Into Water, Fish May Be Drowned

WARM SPRINGS, Ga., Aug. 23. (AP)—You've often heard someone remark about fish "getting pale around the gills." Well—the government says they do just that.

Owners of gold fish are warned by the Warm Springs federal hatchery that when the gold fish in the bowl become pale the water is too hot and it should be changed if the inmates of the bowl are to live and do well.

Just drop a small piece of ice into the water and watch the color become natural again.

Perhaps oxygen is lacking in the water, too. That can be remedied by dipping out and pouring back the water, if fresh water is not convenient. Fresh water is better.

And don't put your gold fish in the sun long at a time because a small amount of water soon becomes unhealthy for the fish and they die.

The government is authority, too, for the statement that a fish can be drowned, if constantly dipped into water tail first. The water runs through the gills backward and strangles the fish.

DOOMED MURDERERS APPEAL TO PUBLIC

ATHENS, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Attorneys for Weyman and Harvey Bradberry, Clarke county youths under death sentence for murder of a negro couple, Saturday issued an appeal to the public to help save the lives of the prisoners.

The Bradberrys were resentenced at Watkinsville Friday to pay the death penalty on September 11. They were convicted of murdering Doc Elder and his wife, negro residents of Oconee county.

The attorneys appealed to the public in an effort to get interested citizens to write the prison commission for a recommendation that the death penalty be changed to life imprisonment. The attorneys said that the boys were the "tools" of Raymond Cooper, their brother-in-law, in the killings. Cooper is serving a life sentence.

DR. RICH ADDRESSES WAYCROSS KIWANIANS

WAYCROSS, Ga., Aug. 23.—Dr. W. H. Rich, pastor of the First Baptist church, in an address before the Kiwanis Club Friday, stressed the permanent qualities of ideas and ideals. He drew an eloquent illustration of how Athens stressed ideals and how these ideals had continued to live while the military emphasis of Sparta had ceased to influence the world. The message of Christ, said Dr. Rich, was an appeal to have the highest ideals in daily living.

Dr. Paul K. McGee and Ensign Charles Johnson explained the work of the Salvation Army in Waycross, its plans for the coming year, and the plan for the annual financial campaign on August 28.

Among the guests of the club were H. W. Rohrer, state Y. M. C. A. secretary; Malcolm Parker, of the Waycross Y. M. C. A., and Charles Dixon, of the Service Ice Company.

R. U. McMillan, Charles Hagerty and Joe Groover were named as the "On To Jackson" committee charged with having a large representation at the district Kiwanis convention.

SAVANNAH BOY, 13, KILLED BY TRUCK

William Barbaree Falls From Bicycle Under Wheels of Vehicle.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—William Barbaree, 13, only son of Mr. and Mrs. W. I. Barbaree, living at Victory drive and Dixie avenue, was instantly killed Saturday night when he fell from his bicycle and under the wheels of a moving ice truck at Victory drive and Ash street, not far from his home.

The boy's skull was crushed as a rear wheel passed over it. No other part of the lad's body was touched.

William Anthony, 26, negro driver of the truck, was taken in custody. Tom Hood, negro, who was riding on the truck, fled after the accident and has not yet been apprehended. Police are awaiting his capture by entering a definite charge. A tentative charge of involuntary manslaughter has been made.

Hood was the only eye-witness to the accident. If he is not found the coroner will have to hold an inquest.

MACON, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Mrs. R. L. Kennedy, returning from the office of a physician where she had received treatment for an arm broken three weeks ago, suffered additional injuries Saturday when the automobile in which she was riding collided with another machine and overturned.

The car was being driven by Mrs. Carl P. Rose and both she and Mrs. Kennedy were taken to a clinic for treatment. Mrs. Kennedy suffered a broken nose and other minor hurts. Mrs. Rose was not badly injured.

The other automobile, driven by Mrs. Edward G. Jeffries, was damaged. The accident occurred at a downtown street intersection.

No case was made by the police.

VALDOSTA, Ga., Aug. 23.—Funeral services for W. H. Browning and his wife, both of whom were killed Thursday night by bandits robbing a filling station operated by the couple, seven miles south of Valdosta on state highway No. 7. Immediately after the services the two bodies were taken to Tarpon Springs, Fla., where interment will take place Sunday.

In the meantime scores of men who have participated in the man hunt in and around the swamp south of the city have given up the chase, officers admitting now that the bandits evidently made a successful escape from this section of the state. Liner Seeks Record On N. Y.-Havana Run

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Prepared to establish a new record for the New York to Havana run, the new $5,000,000 Ward liner Morro Castle sailed at noon today from the foot of Wall Street on her maiden voyage for Havana.

The vessel, 500 feet long, is the largest of those in the Havana run and is capable of making 21 knots. However, Captain Joseph E. Jones said he would probably maintain a speed of 20 knots which would bring the ship into port at Havana within 60 hours, nine hours better than the record held by the Orizaba of the same line.

Erlanger Theater Players Rehearsing "Sure Fire" for Opening on September 1

Busy days are the order at the Erlanger theater this week. For, one week from Monday, the popular Erlanger Theater Players start their fall and winter season. The opening production will be "Sure Fire," that sparkling and human comedy success of the New York stage, a play that offers every member of the cast splendid opportunity to display their finest histrionic gifts and a play that has an appeal for every class of theater-goer.

Director Harry McKee and his players are hard at work, every day, rehearsing, striving for that perfect performance for which they were noted during the spring season. And Art Director Albert H. Amend, with another tremendously high, and self-set, standard to work for, is striving to create stage settings for the production that will, once again, make the audiences blink with delight at color and perfection of scenic investiture.

Three important new members of the Players' organization are rapidly gaining that "at home" feeling which their co-workers know so well from their previous stay in Atlanta.

Marion Eburne-Hall, one of the most lovely and capable leading ladies who ever played in stock, will introduce her blonde personality to Atlanta audiences for the first time on Monday, September 1. Playing opposite her will be another newcomer, the leading man, Thomas McQuillan. And Eva Edge, clever little ingenue from Canada, will be the third new figure on the Erlanger stage.

Other members of the company will be the same as last spring—for Manager Lew Haase and Director McKee felt that it would be well nigh impossible to find other players who could take the place of these in the affections of Erlanger audiences.

Melba Palmer, Jean Arden, Arthur Jacobson, Herbert DeGuerre, Roy Elkins, Frank Joyner, Bob Hicks, etc. All are back again, refreshed from a summer of rest and anxious to give once more of their best for the friends they have made in Atlanta.

Under a new system of advance subscriptions, devised to offer an opportunity to the hundreds of Atlantans who were anxious for some means by which they could substantially support this permanent production organization which has come to be so prized a civic asset for the city, strips of special tickets are now on sale at the theater. They are good in any quantity for any performance and are sold at a considerable reduction. Six $1 tickets may be secured this way for $5, while six 75c tickets are available for $4.

Reservations for the opening week and for the season are on sale at the box office daily from 10 a. m. to 8 p. m. Top price for any night performance is $1. Wednesday matinees are scaled at 50c down while the highest priced seat on Saturday afternoons may be secured for 75c. There will be no Thursday matinees this season.

Following "Sure Fire," the opening week, the management has announced "Apron Strings," comedy success of the present New York season, as the second production.

Only 2 Per Cent Population Of United States Unemployed

April Survey by Census Bureau Reports Michigan Leading States With 3.3 Hunting Jobs.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—A total of 2,598,151 able-bodied Americans, comprising 2 per cent of the country's total population, were listed today by the census bureau as unemployed last April and looking for work.

The total was announced on the basis of preliminary returns from every section of the country. The bureau explained that six other classes of unemployed were not included in the present total, but added that those "without a job, able to work and looking for a job" unquestionably constituted the bulk of those to be listed as unemployed.

Because tabulations have not been completed on the number of persons now gainfully employed, a definite comparison was not available. The bureau estimated, however, employed would approximate 40 per cent of the total population. This would bring the number idle to approximately 5 per cent of the normally employed population.

By states the percentage of job seekers ranged from 0.3 in South Dakota and Mississippi to 3.2 in Rhode Island and New Jersey and 3.3 in Michigan.

The other classes to be covered by the unemployment census include those having jobs but laid off without pay; persons unable to work; those having jobs and voluntarily idle, and vacationists and others drawing pay but not at work.

The group laid off without pay was considered particularly important in coal mining districts where the bureau reported a disposition on the part of miners to report themselves laid off rather than jobless, even though they have done no work for a long period. Many in the group were believed to be in the same economic status of the job-seekers. A good portion also was expected to represent workers laid off for short periods for seasonal or other temporary reasons. Other classes were not considered important in consideration of the unemployment problem, but will be included to avoid confusion.

A table giving the totals by states follows. All figures are subject to revision by the census bureau.

TECH, GEORGIA IN TOUGH SPOTS AS RACE NEARS

Great Season Looming as Teams Prepare for Practice.

By Ralph McGill.

With Georgia Tech and Georgia in their usual spots, the very toughest offered, the Southern conference football season is in the wings waiting to nudge baseball right off the stage about 9 o'clock Monday morning week.

The local prospects are packed with enough pyrotechnics to cause permanent pop-eyes and chronic laryengitis but just to make the thing unanimous there are 17 intersectional games on the Southern program.

Oh, my, yes, the stars and bars will wave in many a dressing room on many a cold Saturday afternoon along about 2 o'clock, eastern standard time, this autumn.

There are any number of teams which rank as the favorites at this writing with the first day still a week away.

THE SCHEDULES.

As usual most of the boys have builded their schedules with just one or two calloused spots on it. They need but a few breaks to come right on through in a couple of games and then have clear sailing for an undefeated conference season.

Tulane, champions in 1930, offers a fair example. Tulane may lose to the Texas Aggies or to Northwestern but if they get by Tech and Georgia there is nothing to halt them in the conference schedule. They figure to beat the rest of the boys on the card. Despite the loss of Bill Banker and Ike Armstrong from the backfield, the Greenies are pretty strong with that line back and some good reserve and freshmen material.

Kentucky needs to get by but Alabama and Tennessee to have a pretty clear pathway. There are one or two others with similar schedules.

TARHEELS GOOD.

In fact one might select North Carolina to sit in the victor's chair this early and not be far wrong. Vanderbilt has a great chance if their freshmen material develops.

In fact, if one dared to be more or less fearless, one might select North Carolina, Kentucky, Tulane and Vanderbilt as the four elevens with the best chances to emerge from the conference schedule unscathed. Vanderbilt's chances aren't so warm, they meeting Tech and Tennessee on consecutive Saturdays.

North Carolina needs but few breaks to come galloping through. They have 80 men out there with plenty of real football plays in the squad. They return their key men.

JUST CAN'T DO IT.

Tennessee, with a slightly cruder schedule this season, figures to take one or two on the chin. Tennyson's brook may have gone on forever, but no one ever saw it. More than likely it stopped in the drouth this summer if never before. And then there was that 1909 drouth. The Vols can't go on forever.

Still, they may. One never can tell. They have fooled the best of the experts for about three years now.

Tech is picking on the Quaker State this season. Two strong Pennsylvania teams, Carnegie Tech and Pennsylvania, are to be met this fall.

GEORGIA IN EAST.

Georgia goes to New Haven for Yale and takes on New York University again.

These games, plus a very difficult conference schedule, makes the two Georgia elevens occupy the short end of the odds when one talks about an undefeated team.

Other teams are going in for intersectional games where a victory will mean some sort of prominence. Mississippi and Florida take on Stagg's Maroons at Chicago. The Grand Old Man of the Midway fooled even his staunchest friends with his team of 1929. He won't be easy this fall.

GREENIES IN TEXAS.

Tulane goes into the southwest and northwest for intersectional trials, meeting Texas Aggies and Northwestern.

The Commodores, headed by Your Uncle Dan McGugin, go to Minneapolis for the second game, meeting the Minnesota Gophers. The standing is all square. Vanderbilt beat the Gophers, 16 to 0, in 1924 and lost by a couple of touchdowns last fall.

Duke, with the greatest intersectional schedule of them all in 1929, has slowed up a bit. Duke takes the Navy and Villanova for trials this fall.

YALE AND NAVY.

Maryland has Yale and the Navy. Virginia has a lone game, meeting Penn a month before Tech goes up.

Rus Cohen's L. S. U. eleven meets South Dakota Wesleyan and Arkansas. Sewanee goes to Texas for a game with Rice.

The southern elevens will hardly be favorites in any of the contests. They will, however, return with some games. They always do.

At any rate, one week from tomorrow, Old John Public may rise from his bed, give one wild scream and have no one demanding insanity proceedings until December 6 has come and gone.

140 Yale Candidates Called for Practice

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 23.—(AP)—The call to football togs went out today from the Yale Athletic Association's office to 140 men from whom Head Coach Mal Stevens will select Yale's 1930 football team. Sixteen lettermen are among those who will report September 15.

'W. L.' Favored of Five Who Would Be Heavyweight King

Here are the five leading heavyweights, including one who is the rather dubious champion. Before next spring comes one of them is expected to be definitely crowned king of the heavyweight fighters. W. L. Stribling, of Georgia, is the ruling favorite to wear the crown. One of the remaining four will be eliminated next month when Sharkey meets Campolo. Left to right, in the heavyweight portrait gallery: W. L. Stribling, Jack Sharkey, Victorio Campolo, Primo Carnera and Max Schmeling. Schmeling won the title on a foul, the boxing commission declaring him champion after Sharkey had fouled him. Stribling, who knocked out Von Porat and Phil Scott in short order, is to fight this winter in Florida.

Records Fall as Stars Clash in A. A. U. Games

Los Angeles Athletes Lead Attack Which Breaks Three Marks—Ed Hamm Unplaced.

By Ted Vosburgh,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Aug. 23.—(AP)—A new world's record in the discus throw and the best shot put and javelin heave ever recorded in America featured the national senior track and field championships of the Amateur Athletic Union at the University of Pittsburgh stadium this afternoon.

Led by a powerful band of athletes from Los Angeles A. C., which captured team honors by an overwhelming margin and also carried off seven of the 20 individual titles, the track and field talent of the far west turned in the most spectacular performances as Uncle Sam served notice of considerable strength at his command for the meet with the British empire at Chicago Wednesday night.

Sharing the spotlight with sensational achievements in the discus, javelin and shot was the latest renewal of sprinting rivalry between Eddie Tolan, of the University of Michigan, and George Simpson, of Ohio State. This time the honors in the 100-yard dash went to Michigan's "Midnight Express" after a great race in which he collared his rival at the half-way mark, but the Buckeye Bullet came back to beat him in the 220-yard sprint and set a new American record of 21.3 seconds for this event around a turn.

THE TALLY.

All told, one world's record was set, another was equalled, three American records went by the board and five championship records went into the discard as this fifty-fifth annual meet provided all the thrills that had been anticipated and more besides.

Perhaps the outstanding individual feat was that of Paul Jessup, 6 foot 6 inch discus thrower from the Washington A. C., of Seattle, whose athletes vied with those of the Los Angeles A. C., in sensational performances. This human skyscraper threw the discus 169 feet 8 7-8 inches to better by six feet the present world's record held by Eric Krenz, of Stanford University, who did not compete here.

In some of the other big moments of the day, Steve Anderson, also of the Washington delegation, equaled the world mark of 14.4 to retain his 120-yard high hurdle championship with several feet to spare; Herman Brix, former University of Washington athlete now competing for the Los Angeles A. C., set a new American mark of 52 feet 5 3-4 inches for the shot put, and Jimmy Demers, of the Los Angeles A. C., sent the javelin hurtling away to a distance of 222 feet 6 3-4 inches to beat the American record by a good 10 feet.

Ed Genung, an unheralded Washington A. C. half-miler, reeled off the distance in 1:53:4 to set a new meet record and turn in one of the best exhibitions the running events produced.

MANY SURPRISES.

Surprises were many, on both track and field. Pete Bowen, quarter-mile titleholder, lost his crown in a thrilling race won by Vic Williams, of the Los Angeles A. C., and collapsed into the cinders. The University of Pittsburgh flyer burned himself out in an early attempt to set the pace and at the finish was so completely undone that he was taken to a hospital for observation.

Anderson, after retaining his high hurdling crown, went out to defend his honors in the 220 low sticks and failed in dramatic fashion, falling when in the second place and almost within reaching distance of the tape while Bob Maxwell, of the Los Angeles A. C., went on to win with Lee Sentman, of the University of Illinois, as runnerup.

Fred Sturdy, once of Yale and now of the Los Angeles A. C., won his pole vaulting argument with Tommy Warne, of Northwestern University, but in unconclusive fashion as Warne sprained an ankle and was unable to continue in a jump-off after both had cleared 13 feet 6 inches.

HAMM DISAPPOINTS.

The showing of Ed Hamm, the Olympic champion, and Ed Gordon, University of Iowa negro and the defending titleholder here, in their specialty, the broad jump, proved a disappointment. Neither appeared in top form and both failed to place as Al Bates, former Penn State athlete, won with a leap of 24 feet 3 3-4 inches.

NEWPORT TITLE WON BY TILDEN

Veteran Beats Allison in Rain; Tilden, Hunter Win Doubles.

By W. R. King,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 23.—(AP) The magic that Big Bill Tilden puts into his tennis racquet today overcame the elements and youth to give him his first important victories of the current American court season.

The lanky national champion, injured leg and hip and all, played through a driving rainstorm this morning and successfully defended his Newport Casino singles championship against the young but seasoned Wilmer Allison, Davis Cup doubles player from Austin, Texas, in a stirringly close finale, 6-1, 0-6, 5-7, 6-2, 6-4.

A few hours later, when the weather had cleared, the aging Philadelphian joined forces with his doubles partner, Frank Hunter, of New Rochelle, to turn back the hard-fighting midwestern youngsters, Wilbur Coen, Jr., of Kansas City, and Harrison Coggeshall, Des Moines, Iowa, in another five-set battle for the doubles trophies by scores of 6-3, 6-4, 0-6, 3-6, 6-2.

AMAZING SKILL.

Through a wild southeast storm Tilden battled Allison. Although rain interfered with their vision, both played with amazing skill. Their sure footing and accuracy on the slippery court seemed unbelievable.

Tilden won because he was able to earn two more points than Allison and commit 16 less errors.

Despite the rain, both consented to play their finals match to prevent the Casino tournament from conflicting with next week's national doubles play at Brookline, Mass.

It rained hard for several hours before the start. About 1,500 heavily wrapped spectators saw the match. Many times during the play the downpour was so heavy that the gallery was unable to keep track of the ball.

EXPERIENCE IN RAIN.

Tilden's Wimbledon experience, where rain is seldom permitted to halt the play, stood him in good stead at the start and he gained an early lead by making a runaway of the opening set. Allison spent these first seven games experimenting and found that his "cut," which stops a ball dead on a dry court, was even more effective on the wet turf. This discovery enabled him to even the match by taking the second at love.

Allison outballed Lanky Bill by the closest of margins in the third set to go into the lead but his game lost much of its keenness in the following set and Tilden was again even with him. They played on without rest and at the crucial point of the match Tilden started applying the pressure and put on enough to obtain the "rubber" set.

Tilden's singles win gave him the first leg on the new challenge cup, twin brother of the trophy that he retired last year when he gained the third Casino title of his long career.

CRACKERS BEAT MEMPHIS, 5 TO 1

Hearn Hurls Good Ball To Down Leading Chicks.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Aug. 23.—Paradoxically speaking, the Chickasaws are leading the league and limping backward. They lagged a little more in their pennant stride today as they suffered their fourth straight defeat when the Crackers took the first of a two-game series by the score of 5 to 1. The Chicks and Crackers will wind up their business for this year at Russwood park tomorrow afternoon and then move to Atlanta where they will carry on for three more games.

As the result of the setback today while the second place Pelicans were bowling over the Vols, the margin of the Tribe was cut to 9 1-2 games.

CHICKS LISTLESS.

There should not be any cause for alarm over a team sloughing off a 9 1-2-game lead with less than three times that many more games to play, but the lackadaisical manner in which the Chicks have played and the poor pitching they have gotten during the four straight defeats is not anything to cause Chief Prothro, of the Tribe, to jump out of the bed early every morning and do a hand spring. On the other hand, the good doctor is probably playing some "night basketball."

The slump of the Chicks has been blamed to pitching. The slump today can be attributed to the pitching of Bunny Hearn, the diminutive left-hander of the Crackers, who allowed seven hits and kept them separated throughout six innings. When Hearn turned the Chicks back without a score for eight innings it rounded out 18 innings in which the Chicks had not scored. With the assistance of an error by Bobby Lamotte at third the Chicks rallied and scored in the last round today.

Like those who had preceded him for the past five days, Walter Beck, the big right-hander of the Tribe, pitched another spotted game today. He was off to a bad start when the Crackers scored twice in the first inning, settled down for four innings and then had his troubles in the latter rounds, although poor fielding by his help heaped some of the trouble on him. Beck, however, was hit 11 times and his help was not the cause of base hits.

Two Atlanta Groups Bidding for Stribling

Jarvis and Crowd Raise Ante As Other Atlantans Await Answer From Offer.

By Ralph McGill.

With one Atlanta group prepared to raise its ante of $350,000 to near a half million dollars for an Atlanta appearance of W. L. (Young) Stribling in the spring, it develops that another group is willing to pay something like $150,000 to see W. L. and some heavyweight fight at the ball park next spring.

Jay Jarvis, who is the mouthpiece for one group of capitalists, declared Saturday that the ante had been raised from $350,000.

That group is waiting for word from Joe Jacobs, manager of Max Schmeling, to decide whether they will go to New York this week for a conference with him or wait until he returns from Germany. Jacobs sails on Thursday but will return in about three weeks.

Meanwhile Lew Diamond, matchmaker for George Carter, the well-known entrepreneur of Miami Beach, is after Stribling for a winter fight at the Beach.

Diamond is waiting until Atlanta promoters reach a decision.

"Pa" told me he was going to wait 10 days on the Atlanta group." Diamond said Friday when he stopped in Atlanta for a few hours. "He will give me the word then."

Jarvis confirmed this Saturday. "Pa" Stribling is going to give us plenty of time to put our plans through," he said. "We plan to go to New York next week if we need to. If not we will go later when Jacobs returns.

WILLING TO GO UP.

"The gentlemen whom I represent are willing to boost the $350,000 if it takes it to get the fight. They believe that a Stribling-Schmeling fight will draw a capacity gate no matter where it is held. Atlanta is the logical place. It is more centrally located than Miami and should draw three-quarters of a million at the gate."

The Atlanta group seeking the ball park fight is thought to have given up the idea temporarily pending a decision on the big outdoor fight which the Jarvis group hopes to put on in a specially constructed arena.

One of their representatives met "Pa" Stribling in New York, when he landed on the return from Europe, with an offer of $100,000 for a Campolo fight. This was turned down for various reasons, one of which was that Sharkey and Campolo are to meet next month.

DOWN ON THE FARM.

Meanwhile "Pa" and W. L. are on their farm at Ochlocknee, emulating the late Mr. John Tarbaby. Mr. Tarbaby said nothing at all.

"Pa" has the Garden in a tough spot. The Striblings won to the cupelo of the fight game without the aid of the Garden. In fact they won to the pinacle despite the Garden. The Garden snubbed the Striblings for near three years.

They did a right about face after the quick knockout of Phil Scott in London and spent $200, or thereabouts, talking over the radio telephone from New York to London. They extended felicitations and a request for an appearance of the Striblings in the Garden.

LET THEM WORRY.

And now "Pa" is letting them sweat, so to speak. The Garden, if it is to go on with the winter fights at Miami, needs Stribling. Any show without him would be a financial flop. And the Garden knows it.

No other fighter has been so sought after since Jack Dempsey punched Jess Willard into a foolish heap at Toledo in 1919. They all want to see Stribling fight.

Lew Diamond, the Miami Beach promoter, intends to advertise the Stribling fight, if landed, for the championship of the world.

HOLD, WINTER FIGHT.

Diamond will hold a winter fight at the Beach and the winner of that fight, which is expected to feature Primo Carnera and Johnny Risko, will be matched against Stribling if it is possible to sign him.

On the other hand there are those who believe that the Garden and its 600 millionaires will land the winter fight and the Schmeling fight in June.

The Garden already has Schmel-

SARAZEN TAKES WESTERN OPEN

New York Pro Posts Sensational 278 To Distance Field.

By Paul Mickelson,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

INDIANWOOD CLUB, ORION, Mich., August 23.—(AP)—Gene Sarazen, swarthy son of Italy, led a par shelling brigade over the Indianwood Club trail today with such an astonishing burst of marksmanship that he ran away with the western open golf championship by a lop-sided margin of seven strokes.

Finding the range of birdies and eagles with remarkable spade shots, the roly-poly New York sharpshooter blasted Old Man Par right out of his stronghold with polishing cards of 69 and 67, which, added to his leading 36-hole total of 142, gave him the handsome sum of 278 strokes for the long 72-hole struggle.

Sarazen's score not only netted him the second lowest score in the tournament's 31 years of play, but won for him one of the few remaining crowns to escape his grasp. Too, it was one of the finest scores he ever carded in the more than 15 years he has been dazzling around the fairways For the distance he was 10 shots under perfect figures.

Al Espinosa, Chicago professional, who lost to Bobbie Jones in the 1929 playoff for the national open title, landed in second place behind the high-flying Saranzen with 285 strokes. The Chicago star bounded there after a great comeback. Tied for 15th after the first 36 holes, Espinosa whizzed over the final two rounds with cards of 70 and 67.

Al Watrous, Detroit pro, and Bill Mehlhorn, of New York, flushed by a record-smashing 65 on his final jaunt, tied for third place money and honors with 286.

Mehlhorn, tied for 15th place at the end of the first 54 holes, gave the tournament probably the wildest finish it has ever known. On his card were eight birdies and one eagle. He had ten one-putt greens, one three-putt green, sent one ball out of bounds and went on stroke over par on three holes. He went out in 33, two under par, and danced back with a 32, five strokes under par's challenge.

Horton Smith won fourth place with 287, while Walter Hagen, buoyed by final rounds of 68 and 71, finished fifth, a stroke away. Tommy Armour, the black Scot, made a weak defense for the title, landing 20 strokes away from the new champion with a 298.

So relentless was the attack on par today that seven better than 70 scores were posted. Sarazen carded two of them. The others were scored by Mehlhorn with his 65, Hagen with his 68, Horton Smith with a 69, Charlie Guest, Detroit, with a 69, and Jimmy Johnston, Toronto star, with a 68.

More than a score broke par. Sarazen had seven birdies and one eagle on his two cards today. On but two holes did he go one stroke over par

EIGHTH-INNING RALLY BRINGS BRUINS VICTORY

Jackson's Homer Scores for McGrawmen; Malone Wins Game.

Jess Petty Bought By Leading Cubs

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The Cubs today purchased Jess Petty, former Brooklyn and Pittsburgh left-handed pitcher, from Newark, of the International league, President William L. Veeck announced.

The deal was a straight cash arrangement, Veeck said, but the price paid for the veteran was not divulged. Petty will report Monday.

The acquisition of Petty will give the Cubs an experienced southpaw for their stretch drive in the National league pennant race. The only other left-hander on the staff is Bud Teachout, a youngster.

By William Weekes.
Associated Press Sports Writer.

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Nine Chicago Cubs, operating together like an intricate machine, caught up the New York Giants today and tossed them one game farther back in the National league standing.

Every man in the Cub lineup contributed some important action, and in less than two hours Chicago had a 4-to-2 victory, Pat Malone had his sixteenth victory of the season, and the Giants were four games back of the National league championship.

The terminal cause of the Giants' downfall was a sizzling single to left field by Hack Wilson with English and Cuyler on bases in the eighth inning, but the pudgy home-run artist's effort would have been wasted had it not been for some preliminary work by Dan Taylor, Cuyler and Clarence Blair, combined with breath-taking fielding by English and long George Kelly.

Malone did not have as easy sailing against the Manhattan maulers as he did against the Brooklyn Robins last week, but he was tough in the hard spots, and the support he received more than made up for any shortcomings on the part of the Altoona (Pa.) fireman.

IN TROUBLE.

Malone got into deep trouble in the fourth inning when Bill Terry turned loose a double—the first of his three hits. Travis Jackson dumped a home run into the right-field bleachers. Jackson's hit just made it, Cuyler almost plucking it off the top of the screen. Malone had other troubles, but with brilliant help was not scored on again.

Carl Hubbell, slender New York southpaw, went along in beautiful style until the eighth inning, when he suddenly lost control and was blasted from the rubber. Until that time he had given only five hits, but when he left three more socks had been registered along with a hit batsman and a walk for two runs.

Both teams fielded perfectly, but the accomplishments of Woody English, Cub shortstop, outshone even the work of Hughie Critz, who saved the Giants a lot of trouble. In the seventh inning he made a great stop and throw to get Lindstrom, and a moment later made another almost impossible stop of Terry's hard slash, but failed to catch the giant first-baseman. Ott doubled into the left centerfield crowd. Terry stopped at third and three pitchers started to warm up for Chicago. English, however, assumed personal charge of the situation, racing over in front of second for O'Farrell's smash to end the inning.

KELLY RUINS RALLY.

Long George Kelly, playing for Charlie Grimm at first base, ruined a Giant rally in the fifth. Lindstrom and Terry singled after Critz had fanned and Leach had popped out. O'Farrell got what looked like a handle hit until Kelly made a backhanded stab for the third out.

The Cubs got their first run in the fourth. Cuyler doubled to right, went to third as Wilson was thrown out and scored on Dan Taylor's long sacrifice fly to Ott. They tied it up in the sixth when Blair was hit and went to third on Cuy-

Wallace Wade Attempts To Put Crimson Tide Back on Heights

SQUAD ARRIVING NOW FOR WADE'S LAST CAMPAIGN

Strong Line Will Help 'Bama; Backfield Problematical.

By Paul Duncan.

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Aug. 23.—Alabama, not listed among the select group of title contenders in the Southern conference this year, but one of the dark horses of the 1930 campaign, will launch football practice September 1, and begin preparations for a championship drive to put the Crimson back upon the heights it once held unchallenged.

Coach Wallace Wade, serving his last year as commander of the Tide grid forces, will call his warriors together on the first of September and start them off on the long grind. With the first game against Howard college scheduled for September 27, Wade will have nearly a month to whip his charges into playing shape.

The first two weeks of this month will be spent in preliminary work, drills and exercises calculated to get the athletes toughened for the heavy labor that is to follow. From about the middle of September until game time, however, the Crimson candidates will get plenty of the work for which Wade is noted, namely, good, hard scrimmaging.

The squad is to work in gym pants and sweat shirts during the first couple of weeks. Because of the intolerable September heat and because no work requiring the protection of heavy uniforms will be given the players, no uniforms will be issued until later.

ALREADY ARRIVING.

Already the warriors have begun to straggle in, arriving early on the scene of battle. A few of the gridders have been working in Denny stadium all summer, preparing the new Alabama playing field for the games this fall. Others have been playing baseball in amateur leagues and still others have been doing outdoor work to keep themselves in condition for the campaign.

John Henry Suther and Hillman Holley, a couple of backfield candidates, have been working in Tuscaloosa and playing baseball. "Foots" Clements, captain of this year's eleven, has been attending summer school, along with John Miller, guard.

Frank Howard, guard; Moore and Elmore, ends; Long, McWright and Bush, backs, have been playing baseball. Campbell, Laslie, Godfree and Boykin have been doing outside work during the summer. Campbell at his home in Durant, Miss.; Laslie at Charlotte, N. C.; Godfree with a gas line near Selma, and Boykin in the coal mines of Birmingham.

Practically all of the leading varsity candidates have been keeping themselves in fair shape by some sort of outdoor labor, which is the reason they are leading candidates.

VETERAN LINE.

Coach Wade will have a veteran line back this season, with a backfield that is still problematical. The forward wall leaves little to worry about, with an array of veterans from tackle to tackle, one end who was mentioned on several all-Southern teams and plenty of reserve material.

Clements and Sington, the giant tackles, will be back at their posts. Miller and Howard will be at guards and Eberdt at center. All of these men are seniors, serving their last year with the Crimson eleven. Jimmy Moore, blonde, scrappy flankman, is back and will probably pair with Ben Smith at the ends. Smith, a reserve fullback, was tried out at an end in spring training and showed up remarkably well. He is almost a 200-pounder, fast and a good pass receiver.

Then in reserve, Wade has a bunch of young sophomore linemen as well as some other capable performers. The sophomore youngsters are: Swain, Taylor and Ray, ends; Laslie, Godfree, Barker and Baker, tackles; Sanford, Freeman, Turner and Frey, guards, and R. Clements, center.

Among the others, mostly juniors, there are Huston, center; Saunders and Whitworth, guards, and Mooney, Hutchinson, M. Jackson and Woods, tackles. Huston, Whitworth and Jackson are a trio of reserves likely to see lots of service. They took part in many of the games last season.

LOTS OF BACKS.

A corps of about 20 backs will report to Coach Wade, but only half of them will see service with the varsity squad. The others will join the Redshirt brigade, a punch-hungry group of huskies who toil through the years as a chopping-block for the varsity. They are the unsung heroes of the gridiron.

Of the ten ball-carriers labeled as varsity performers, only two or three are outstanding stars. The others are steady players whose strength lies in their consistency.

Suther is probably the leading backfield candidate and even he has a sword of Damocles above his head in the trick shoulder that has bothered him for three seasons. If his shoulder stays put, the Crimson halfback, a runner, passer, blocker, kicker and defensive man of the highest caliber, has a chance to place his name among the highest in the south.

Then Johnny Cain, the freshman sensation, is expected to blaze a trail in his first year of varsity play. Cain is another halfback of all-round ability. If he can withstand uninjured the shock of college competition, which is vastly harder than freshman or high school football, Cain should be one of the sophomore flashes of the year.

Hillman Holley, another sophomore, has a chance to become a big gun in the Alabama ranks, if a shaky knee holds up. Campbell, who will probably call signals for the Tide this season, should have a good year. Boykin, Long and McWright are three blocking backs expected to share the burden in the Crimson rear works.

Tucker, Bush, Hughie Miller and Bellini are the other candidates to bolster the Alabama backfield.

A squad of about 50 football players will report at Alabama September 1 when Wade opens practice.

Southern Railway Plays Fort Today

Southern Railway will invade the Fort McPherson diamond this afternoon to battle the soldiers. The game will start at 3 o'clock. This will be the only sport event of the afternoon.

Last Sunday the soldiers lost to the Chicopee Mills team in a fast and well played game. This afternoon the soldiers will be out to avenge that defeat.

Plenty of free parking space has been arranged and a large crowd is expected out for the game. Ladies will be admitted free.

Finlator Sale Breaks Record

SELMA, Ala., Aug. 23.—(AP) Burt Finlator, outfielder for the Selma club of the Southeastern league, has been sold to the Chicago White Sox, officials of the Cloverleafs announced today. A record price for a Southeastern league player was reported paid for Finlator.

The Cloverleafs picked up Finlator, who has been hitting around .340 all season, as a free agent. He will report to the White Sox at training camp next spring.

BALTIMORE WINS SANDLOT BALL

Bests Manchester for Right To Represent East at Memphis.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Baltimore's boys defeated the Manchester, N. H., team, 9 to 1, here today in the final game of the American Legion eastern junior baseball tournament and won the right to compete with the western champions in the little world series in Memphis, Tenn., next week.

Burrows, pitching for the Marylanders on the third consecutive afternoon of the tournament, held the New Hampshire lads to three hits. Maurice Jacobs, 13-year-old midget second baseman, was the Baltimore star. He led at the bat with two singles and a double, and featured in a double play that nipped a Manchester rally in the fifth. Red Reichard, the Baltimore left fielder, got his second home run of the series in the eighth inning with two men on base.

Lyndbourg, pitching the second time for Manchester, was replaced by Gryzbek in the eighth when Reichard drove the ball over the fence with Weiner and Kaun ahead of him.

Jim Barnes Takes Cape Cod Golf Title

CHATHAM, Mass., Aug. 23.—(AP) Jim Barnes, unattached New York professional, won the Cape Cod open golf championship today, completing the 72-hole medal play competition with a score of 305. He scored a 76 in his final round.

Jesse Sweetser, of Siwanoy, N. Y., former United States and British amateur champion, finished second with 317.

The scoring was high again today because of strong winds and rain.

Yachts Postpone Trial Race Today

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Today's scheduled trial races between the yachts Enterprise, Yankee, Weetamoe and Whirlwind to determine which will defend the America's cup against Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger Shamrock V were postponed because of heavy weather. It was the second consecutive day that a postponment was ordered.

W.-L. AGAIN USES ROCKNE SYSTEM

Head Coach Oberst Expects System To Work Better.

LEXINGTON, Va., Aug. 23.—(Special.) — Head Coach Eugene Oberst, of Washington and Lee University, looks forward to another season under the Rockne system of football. This new system of gridiron play was introduced a year ago following a summer camp for football coaches at W. & L., directed by Knute Rockne, Oberst's old coach.

"The Generals never became totally familiar with the new system last fall," Coach Oberst said. "Even during spring training I could notice an improvement in execution of plays. As the men become more experienced with the Rockne plays, I feel sure they will resume their places among the formidable teams of the south."

Washington and Lee will have plenty of power for close line play this year, Oberst reports. A good supply of fullbacks will make this possible. There will be found in Mitchell, letter man, Burgoyne, of last year's freshman eleven, and Stephens, all of whom range between 195 and 200 pounds. Much hope is placed in Stephens, a shot-putter of last spring's track team who could run the century in less than 11 seconds. The head coach also believes, however, the Generals will be well supplied with men for open play too.

Oberst will present a new backfield flash this year in "Dynamite" Evans, a 110-pound wrestler and former backfield star at Mercersburg Academy. Evans did not play freshman football at Washington and Lee last fall, but in spring practice he amazed coaches and players with his slippery speed. He can be used as either quarterback or halfback and can pass and return punts excellently. Bailey, tackle, will also be relied upon to pass and punt. In the game with St. Johns last fall, Bailey passed the ball 55 yards to Bledsoe, the third longest pass in the United States during the season.

Much work will be done this year to develop reserve strength, a feature Washington and Lee has not had for years. Last year was begun with one team in good condition, but injuries in the first two games left the squad with not enough substitutes to fill the places without weakening the team.

Hoppe Accepts Bid For Aerial Billiards

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Willie Hoppe today accepted an invitation from the National Billiard Association of America to play in the first official aerial billiard match. Hoppe announced that he was willing to meet Jake Schaefer or any other opponent selected for an 18.2 balk line match to be played en route from St. Louis to Chicago.

A week ago Charles C. Peterson made 100 points in 28 1-2 seconds in the huge Curtiss-Wright Condor plane over Lambert-St. Louis field in St. Louis. The flying and billiard officials were so impressed with the exhibition that it was decided an attempt would be made to have Willie Hoppe and Jake Schaefer meet in a special match over a course of more than 200 miles, with Peterson as the

Intersectional Games Brace Gridiron Cards

Many Long Trips Face Leading Elevens This Season; Tech, Georgia on List.

By William Ritt,
Central Press Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—Intersectional games, a few years ago just oddities on a football schedule, today are the backbone of many large institutions' grid bookings. This season more intersectional games will be played than ever before.

Intersectional games have done as much as anything else to spread the gospel of the gridiron throughout this country. When eastern teams first began to play middle western elevens the east was made aware of the fact that good football was played west of the Alleghenies. The southern and far western sections also first made known the rapid strides they had made in the game by beating visiting teams from the effete east and middle west.

The intersectional game, aside from increasing interest in the sport by spreading the fans' attention to all fronts every Saturday has also done much to bring football to the same high plane of play in every region through the medium of the different sections learning in the intersectional games those phases of the game developed particularly in other sections.

IRISH HAVE SEVEN.

This year finds Notre Dame again leading the list of schools playing intersectionals. The Irish have booked seven games. They are: Southern Methodist, Navy, Carnegie Tech, Pittsburgh, Penn, Army and Southern California.

Army plays five—Furman, North Dakota, Kentucky Wesleyan, Illinois and Notre Dame—and the Navy three—Notre Dame, Ohio State and Southern Methodist. Penn plays four intersectionals. Harvard will play two, while Princeton and Yale have one each on their books.

The Western Conference (Big Ten) will play many intersectionals this season. Among the chief games will be a trip made by Indiana to Texas to play Southern Methodist and the Princeton-Chicago, Michigan-Harvard, Ohio State-Navy and Army-Illinois games.

HERE'S LIST.

Here are some of the best intersectional games carded this year:

October 4—Tulane at Northwestern. Southern Methodist at Notre Dame.

October 11—Georgia at Yale, Navy at Notre Dame. Georgia Tech at Carnegie Tech. Virginia at Pennsylvania.

October 25—Notre Dame at Pittsburgh. Indiana at Southern Methodist. Mississippi at Chicago.

Washington Ready For Annual Regatta

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Officials of the Middle States Regatta Association said today the entries for the thirty-ninth annual meeting opening September 1 opposite the Old Dominion Boat Club here indicated the meet will be the largest in the east this year.

The association is composed of clubs along the east coast and the meets are usually held in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, or another eastern city. Washington was selected this year since the Old Dominion Club is celebrating its fiftieth anniversary.

The entries are confined to shell boats.

V. P. I. COACHES FACE HARD JOB

Green Squad To Report to New Head Mentors.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Aug. 23.—Virginia Polytechnic Institute soon will gird a green squad consisting mainly of sophomores for the 1930 renewal of old football feuds. Orville Neal and Lyal Clark, new pilots of the Tech coaching staff, must look to new talent for the major share of Gobbler prowess.

Replacements are necessary for 11 letter men, seven of these on the first team. Captain Nutter and Pattie are gone from the flanks; Dex Hubbard, all-stater, from guard, and McEver, Rice, Tomko and Rule from the ball toting array.

Three returning backs sport monograms. Captain Bird Hooper is returning to the quarterback post; Phil Spear, all-state halfback, and his classmate, Mit Owens, fullback, face their final year of varsity ball. Neal also has Cushman Hagerty and Runt Ottley, best of the reserve ground gainers last year. This veteran material must withstand strong bids by fleet ball carriers from the 1929 freshmen.

Although lacking men of the calibre of Frank Peake and other aces of the Gustafson regime, the freshmen are sending up R. Barnes, Bus Hall and Charlie Morgan, all capable halfbacks. Many habitues of the Blacksburg smokeshops believe that one of the three will be the running mate of Phil Spear at halfback this, their first year in varsity togs. Howard and Ristine, the latter the son of an all-American father, are up to battle the veteran Mit Owens for the fullback post. But V. P. I.'s backfield can hardly muster the power of the Pony Express, Gustafson's terrifying combination of 1926-27-28.

The forward wall should be heavy. Hal Wimmer and Gene Brown, both close to 200 pounds, are ready for their second season at center, and Paul Wolfe is up from yearling ranks to strengthen the post. Red Jones, guard, should have his best year and really make it a good one. Bill Betts, Charlie Chrisman and Earl Dykes, reserves, are challenged by seven capable freshman guards headed by Hite, Kasun and Clifton. The coaches are well fortified at tackle with four veterans ready to scrap Seamon, Grinus and Murphy, hefty freshmen trio of last year. The veterans, Green, Stark, Swart and Ritter, all 200-pounders, earned monograms last fall.

For the ends, Chandler, a junior, big and tall, and McIntire, Palmer and Miles, of the '29 yearlings, will fight for the flank vacancies. If the new mentors can find capable ends, one of their chief worries will be dead and buried.

The call has been issued to 44 men to report on Labor Day for early training. Twenty-three of these are sophomores soon to be launched on varsity careers. These are looked to with uncertainty on the eve of a tough schedule which lists new foes in Vanderblit and Davidson on foreign fields.

BACK TO THE RANKS.

When Maxie Rosenbloom asked for permission to fight as a heavyweight the New York commission turned him down and told him to fight his contenders again if he needed work.

Nuthall-Harper Match Deluged

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Aug. 23.—(UN)—The deciding match of the women's national tennis singles championship, scheduled for today, will be played tomorrow, between Betty Nuthall, of Great Britain, and Mrs. L. A. Harper, of California.

Rain deluged the courts today. The rest will probably prove more beneficial to Mrs. Harper than to Miss Nuthall, for the California matron, slight of build, lacks the strength of the robust English girl. Mrs. Harper, however, is not fragile. She proved that in her semi-final engagement with Baroness Levi, of Italy. The baroness was thoroughly run down when she left for the clubhouse, while the Californian still appeared strong.

BRYAN BEATS HALVERSTADT

Atlanta Boy Wins Junior Title But Loses Men's Final.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Unanswerable serves and placements for crucial points gave Lefty Bryan, local ace, the state tennis crown here this afternoon, Jim Halverstadt, Atlanta, falling victim to the blonde portsider after crashing through to win the second set. The score was 6-3, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2.

A steadily improving game at the net and dynamic backhand thrusts played an important part in the triumph over the Cracker, who was invulnerable at the net at the outset, steady throughout and a constant threat.

Jim had won the junior title in the morning by taking a grueling five-set struggle from Ed Sutter, of New Orleans, after spotting the Crescent City flash the first two sets, the match going to the Atlantan at 2-6, 3-6, 6-4, 6-4, 6-1.

The junior doubles diadem went to Tommy Anderson and Merriman Cuninggim, Nashville sharpshooters, who disposed of Sutter and George Boynton, Atlanta, 6-2, 1-6, 6-3, 7-5.

A fighting pair of Atlantans, Jim and Al Halverstadt, battled their way with their back to the wall to down the sensational Sutter and Bryan, 2-6, 1-6, 10-8, 6-2, 6-3, for the men's doubles crown. The scores tell part of the tale of how they pulled out at set point innumerable times, steadied their game thereafter and smothered the local and Crescent City netters' network, which had been brilliant at the outset.

Percy Williams Wins Empire Dash Event

HAMILTON, Ont., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Percy Williams, flying Vancouver lad and Olympic champion, successfully defended his supremacy at 100 yards today by winning the final dash of the Empire games in 9 9-10 seconds. His victory was the second of the day for Canada, Leonard Hutton, Montreal, winning the broad jump. Lord David Burghley, England, set a new Canadian record in the 120-yard hurdles, 14 6-10 seconds.

PREP SQUADS OFF FOR CAMP TO BEGIN WORK

G. M. A. and Tech High Start Grid Practice This Week.

By Roy White.

Two Atlanta prep football squads will start their annual fall practice this week, almost two weeks earlier than the regular training season is scheduled to start.

Georgia Military academy candidates, under the direction of Coaches Padget and McQuarrie, will leave their homes today and join the coaches Monday and Tuesday at Hendersonville, N. C. The annual G. M. A. summer school in the mountains of North Carolina ended Saturday and the camp has been placed in order for the football candidates for two weeks training period.

Tech High candidates with Coach Claude Tolbert in charge, will leave Wednesday for Langston's camp near Fairburn, Ga., where they will put in a week of hard work before returning to Piedmont park for practice early in September.

CALLS CANDIDATES.

Coach Tolbert has requested every boy desiring to attend the camp, to meet Wednesday at the Tech High military building for instructions and details concerning the camp.

A resume of the 1929 team leftovers shows 18 players to return for duty at Tech High this year and 12 of those won their numerals playing in the line last year. The Tech High forward wall, consisting mainly of juniors, will certainly be heard from in prep circles this year.

The Tech High backfield does not look so promising at present. That heavy charging and blocking combination of Hutt, Hammond and Hadley will be missing. Only Boyd, Street and Bullington, the speed merchants, will return. Several scrubs from last year are expected to fill the vacant places and a large number of youngsters are expected to try out from the junior high ranks of last year.

LACK HAMMOND.

Tech High will miss the services of Hammond in the punting department. His consistency in getting off long punts kept the Smithies out of danger in many of the 1929 games. He was recognized as one of the most accurate of prep punters.

It has been the custom for G. M. A. candidates to train in North Carolina for several years. Preparations are being made at the College Park institution for a good season.

"G. M. A. will need all the practice possible, for the Navy freshmen will be played in Annapolis early in October," Coach Padget said before departing for the camp last week.

"Two weeks in the mountains will do the team a lot of good and plenty of fundamental work can be drilled into the youngsters during that time," he added.

GOOD SEASON.

G. M. A. had a very good season last year and put in several weeks of constructive spring training. The Cadets defeated Boys' High, 6 to 0, in a spring game that was packed full of interesting plays. Only those players who will be eligible to play on the 1930 team were permitted to play in the spring contest.

While G. M. A. and Tech High are starting a week early, other prep football candidates will be enjoying their last week of vacation, for every team in the loop is expected to start active work during the first week in September.

Joe Bean, a veteran in southern prep football, will start his 27th season as coach of Marist when the Cadets are called for duty.

Shorty Doyal will start his seventh season as coach of Boys' High.

TERRY TIGHTENS GRIP ON '6' LEAD

By Associated Press.

Bill Terry tightened his grip on the Big Six league in a day of changes in the standing yesterday in registering a two-point gain while his two National league rivals suffered severe losses. Terry made three hits in five times at bat to lift his average to .409.

Babe Herman and Chuck Klein had a hitless day, Herman going to bat eight times and Klein three. The Brooklyn batter dropped eight points to .386 and fell from second to fifth place in the standing while Klein, losing two points, went into fourth at .388.

Al Simmons took second and the undisputed American league lead as his two hits in four times up brought him a one-point gain while Lou Gehrig, kept idle by rain, remained at .390.

Middle Georgia Set For Greatest Season

COCHRAN, Ga., Aug. 23.—Middle Georgia college starts another year September 1 and Coach Jake Morris for the past two years has been getting things in shape for the opening of the football season. The college expects to have the best team in the school's history as from the squad of 22 good men last year, 18 are returning.

Middle Georgia college was proud of her two largest tackles in the United States last year in Pete Harrell and Roy Smalley with their combined weight of 500 pounds. The line this year will average 195 pounds from end to end.

Coach Jake Morris starts his third year with the team. Under his coaching the team has played 20 games and lost but one. Assistant Coach Hughes Browning leaves this year to complete his studies at Peabody but will be with the team during the month of September.

The schedule for this season is the toughest the college ever attempted and is as follows:

September 26—Lanier High, Macon.
October 3—Dahlonega, Cochran.
October 11—Georgia State College for Men, Tifton.
October 17—Teachers' college, Statesboro.
October 24—Open.
October 31—Gordon, Barnesville.
November 8—Alabama Teachers' college, Anniston, Ala.
November 14—Brewton-Parker, Cochran.
November 21—Open.
November 27—South Georgia State college, Douglas.

A squad of 50 men will report September 2 for the opening.

PASSES 200TH.

The first ball game Herb Pennock won this year was his 200th victory in the big show.

Jackets Will Depend on Passing and Kicking Game This Year

GREAT DEFENSE BOOSTS STOCK OF TECH SQUAD

Barron and Dunlap Stand Out as Main Offensive Weapons.

By Ralph McGill.

Give Tech six or seven points this fall and the Jackets will be very, very obnoxious for any team seeking to win a football game.

No team is going to score much against the team at the Flats this fall. On the other hand the big problem out there is the offense.

There will be, of course, much speculation about the Jackets and their offense. It will contain a lot of kicking, as an offensive weapon, and considerable passing.

PAT BARRON.

Pat Barron, the fast little scion of the prominent Clarksville family, will be the speed threat, filling the hole left by Stumpy Thomason. He will mask the passing and the kicking.

Captain Earl Dunlap, one of the finest passers in years, will take care of that department. And Sid Williams, a halfback, will take care of the kicking.

Just who is going to [illegible] past Vance Maree and Frank [illegible]er or trudge around Tom and Cas[illegible] Jones, is quite a mystery. There will be those who will essay it. But as for getting away with it, that is another story.

GREAT DEFENSE.

Tech's defense stacks up about like the Federal Reserve building. And just try to crash those gates.

A line is built around the tackles with the guards and center as very valuable subsidiaries.

Vance Maree, who showed some of the finest sportsmanship and courage last year it has been possible to see, will be back in his native habitat at tackle.

He played fullback last season because the team demanded it, material being lacking. He played it well, comparatively speaking. A lot of boys who put in years of effort at the job did less than he in one short season. He was unable to cover passes well and was a target all year. But he kept going and he never winced nor cried out about it.

A GREAT SEASON.

Vance Maree's performance in 1929 was shrouded in near oblivion, but it was one of the finest he will ever turn in. This year, with Frank Speer working at the other tackle, he should have a great season and be a shooting pain in the neck to the opposition.

Speer presents a problem, albeit an optimistic one. He has been out for one season. He is a bit fat with that one year's lay-off. Yet he has spent most of it at hard work and his spring practice showed no ill-effects. Holt, Harrison, Fincher and Millians are reserves.

Ike Farmer, the stocky center, has had a summer of injuries, but should be in shape. He has two freshmen graduates, Neblett and Burgess, as aides. And Ezell is a holdover from 1929.

BROOKS IS BACK.

Jim Brooke, one of the best guards in the conference in 1929, returns this season. Edwards, Law and McKee return from the 1929 reserve squad. Corn, Branch, DeLoach and Davis come up from the freshman team. The guards, with the exception of Brooke, are as yet unproved. There is enough material there, however, to obtain capable performers.

It may be possible to shoot a six-inch shell through the line, but it would hardly go through, especially if directed at the tackles.

Alternate-Captain Tom Jones has another one of the Jones family to help at end this season. He goes by the name of Casey. Goldsmith, Herrin and Isaacs are back for another try.

ENDS LOOK STRONG.

The ends look strong. They were good last year, even though the records don't show it.

Colvin, Pipkin and McArthur will be reserve quaterbacks with one of them being shifted to halfback if he shows enough.

Doug Graydon, the flashy sophomore of 1929, returns, as does Bob Strickland, who came with a rush in the final games of 1929.

Sid Williams, who may play an offensive halfback and a defensive full, will be a great help to that offense, as will Pat Barron. Hart is another who is expected to develop into a halfback aid.

PLUNGING BACKS.

Tom Cain, the fullback from Texas; Cheery and Weatherford make up the plunging department.

The offense need not necessarily be restricted to kicking and passing. There is no telling what these sophomores of 1929 will do with a year's experience behind them.

There will be, however, quite a lot of passing and kicking. In the first place it is one of the best offenses possible when one has a great defense. And it is foolish not to develop it when one has men who can kick and pass.

Tech's killing schedule almost prohibits an undefeated season. Yet the Jackets are likely to upset the conference. It is entirely possible.

They have W. A. Alexander, for one thing. And that is an asset that means more than a few touchdowns. Not to mention what Bill Fincher, Mike Miles and the others will do.

And if Mike Chambers can't keep team on the field no man can.

Girl Turns Pro And Wins Swim

TORONTO, Ontario, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Margaret Ravior, 23-year-old Philadelphia girl, who turned professional to compete in the women's 10-mile marathon swim of the Canadian national exhibition, was $5,000 the richer thereby today.

While other favorites found the pace too swift and dropped out, the Philadelphia youngster, a virtual unknown in marathon swimming, found chilly Lake Ontario to her liking yesterday and slashed her way to victory by nearly three minutes over Mrs. Ruth Gower Corsan, of Toronto, runner-up last year ago to Martha Norelius Wright. Miss Ravior's victory earned for her first prize money of $5,000, while the $2,500 went to Mrs. Corsan, a former Denver resident.

Ethel McGarry, of New York, who, like Miss Ravior, turned pro to compete in the event, set the pace for eight miles, only to collapse with victory in sight. Miss Ravior then took the lead and never relinquished it.

Third place and $1,000 went to Ethel Hertle Gary, of New York. Other prize winners were: Fourth, Ray Looney, Warren, Ohio, $750; fifth, Anna Priller Benoit, Miami, Fla., $500; sixth, Irene Yurack, Elmhurst, N. Y., $250.

Checker King

Harold Almond, of Atlanta, retained the state checker championship which concluded Friday at Marietta. He defeated W. T. Newman, also of Atlanta, in the finals. Almond is a well-known player in Atlanta.

MARVIN, JONES SIGN FOR BOUT

Texan, Indian Will Clash at Spiller's on Labor Day.

John Paul Jones, the leaping Texan with the lethal hook scissors at the end of the leap, will see what can be done about subduing the Indian uprising that has broken out in local wrestling circles.

Jones will meet Chief Tom Marvin, Indian grappler, here Labor Day night at Spiller field, on a card which will include Milo Steinborn and Bill Bartush, 215-pound Jugo-Slav wrestler, in the semi-windup.

Marvin defeated Paul Harper here last week and showed a lot of form in doing so. The match was one of the greatest ever staged here so far as action was concerned.

In it Marvin showed his "Cherokee chin lock," a hold which twists the neck and jaw until the victim surrenders. It is the next thing to a scalping party, and how that Indian does enjoy it!

Bartush, the newcomer to Atlanta, is described as a real wrestler well-known in eastern mat circles.

"I promise all wrestlers who work in the main event another match with a better opponent when they win here," said Matchmaker Henry Weber Saturday. "Marvin beat Harper, so I have got Jones for him."

Weber is taking cognizance of the fact that the match is being held on Labor Day and will honor the men who celebrate the day. Regular prices will prevail, but any man who presents a union card will be admitted for $1 to any seat in the stands. As ladies are already admitted to any seat for that amount, it will be possible to take the wife for the sum of one admission.

Jones is a great favorite here and Marvin almost broke the hearts of local fans when he beat Harper. They will all be pulling for the Texan to destroy the Indian.

Steinborn, with his prodigious strength, is always a favorite, and his match will be watched with interest. Tickets will be on sale this week at the Candler building soda fountain and at the Piedmont hatters.

Don Leon Takes Juvenile Classic

HAWTHORNE RACE TRACK, Chicago, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Don Leon won the Chicago Juvenile handicap with $10,000 added, closing the 18-day meeting at Hawthorne today. Siskin was second and In-Between third. Don Leon ran the 6 furlongs in 1:13. Martha Jones was fourth in the field of 11 starters.

Don Leon, ridden by Jockey D. Bryant, schouldered 122 pounds and ran away with the stake. Bryant took his mount to the front at the start and led all the way, having an advantage of six lengths at the finish. Don Leon paid $14.94 to win, $6.92 to place and $5.30 to show.

The race had a gross value of $13,425, with $9,925 going to R. W. Collins, owner of the winner.

Garrard Retains Columbus Crown

COLUMBUS, Ga., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Frank U. Garrard, Jr., defending champion, defeated William Golden, 5 and 3, today in the final round of the seventh annual golf tournament of the Columbus Country Club.

Both players are from Columbus. This morning Golden defeated Bobby Chambers, of Atlanta, 1-up, and Garrard won over Billy MacWilliams, of Rome, 5 and 3.

Miniature Golfers Lose Prize Money

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Devotees of miniature golf here lost a chance to shoot at prizes totalling $1,000 in a tournament here. The local association sponsoring the contest announced today that the U. S. Golf Association had ruled that a person taking cash prizes in such a tournament would be barred from amateur competition in regular golf. So the prizes will be various articles instead of money.

Mrs. W. P. Andrews Breaks 76 Targets

VANDALIA FIELD, DAYTON, Ohio, Aug. 23.—Mrs. W. P. Andrews, of Atlanta, broke 76 in 100 targets in the international hundred, one of the three events in the final day of trapshooting in the 31st annual grand American handicap.

She was Georgia's lone entry for the day.

ALMOST SAME TEAM RETURNS AT TENNESSEE

Neyland Will Miss Only Four Regulars From 1929 Squad.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 23.—Only four regulars from the undefeated 1929 Vol eleven will be missing when Major Bob Neyland greets his University of Tennessee football squad on Labor Day. Jim Finney, center; Howard Johnson and Jake Johnston, tackles, and Ben Fuller, guard, were lost from the center of the line, but to offset this the Vol backfield, including that famous trio of Hack, Mack and Dodd, returns intact.

If several likely looking sophomore tackle prospects live up to expectations, the biggest puzzle confronting Neyland will be solved. Louis Roberts, who has subbed at the center position for two years, is counted on to handle that post to perfection. John Franklin, a sophomore, seems to be the best bet to replace Fuller at guard.

Ray Saunders, who was rated as a substitute tackle in 1929, but who, in reality, was the best forward in the Vol camp, should make himself a very unwelcome visitor in rival backfields this fall. Hickman, chubby Knoxville boy, will battle it out with Aitken, Smiley, and Still for the other post.

ENDS ARE FIXED.

So much for the gaps that must be filled. We turn now to the flanks and there stands Fritz Brandt and Paul Hug, two of the finest ends in Dixie last season, eager to start their last season under the Orange and White banner.

Brandt, especially, is counted on for great things this fall. The tall Erwin boy has taken on additional poundage and with two year's experience under his belt should step with the best of 'em. Coach Neyland declared at the end of spring practice in May that Brandt was the best end prospect he had ever seen.

The mere mention of Tennessee's backfield is enough to convince anyone that barring injuries the Vols will be tough to halt. Gene McEver and Buddy Hackman, the touchdown twins, will be whirling and prancing over the Shields-Watkins field again. Both showed up in the middle of summer with injuries, but from all indications they will be back in harness when the first whistle blows.

BOBBY DODD.

Bobby Dodd, Dixie's premier quarterback, will guide the Vol craft again. Ty Disney, Quinn Decker and Bill Cox will fight it out for the fourth position in the backfield, with Disney conceded the best chance to win the honor.

It will be strictly a senior team which Tennessee will trot out this season, but senior teams sometimes run amuck with all kinds of trouble. It remains to be seen just what fate has in store for Major Bob Neyland and his Vols.

Men who are expected to report Labor Day follow:

ENDS—Brandt, Hug, Derryberry, Clemmer, Holt, Rankin, Rayburn.
TACKLES—Saunders, Hickman, Aitken, Still, Smiley, Beene, Fooshee, Driskell.
GUARDS—Captain Thayer, Franklin, Moore, Brown, Templeton, Goodrich, Redman and Walser.
CENTERS—Roberts, Mayer, Mitchell, Stringer, Shull, Green.
QUARTERBACKS—Dodd, Faust, Brackett, Gillespie, Reineke.
HALFBACKS—McEver, Hackman, Allen, Blumberg, McCollister, Robinson, Whittaker, Warfield.
FULLBACKS—Disney, Cox, Decker, Kohlhase.

TOCCOA LEADING IN TITLE SERIES

GAINESVILLE, Ga., Aug. 23.—Toccoa and Gainesville will play the second game of their play-off series for the pennant in the Home Talent league of north Georgia on Thursday of this week in City park here.

Gainesville won the first half of the season, which ended July 3, and Toccoa won the second half, ending August 15.

The first game of the two-out-of-three series was played in Toccoa August 19 with Toccoa winning, 7 to 3. If Toccoa wins the game at Gainesville Thursday it will be awarded the flag. If Gainesville wins, a third game will be played on Sanford field in Athens on Labor Day, if present arrangements go through.

The Home Talent league, just completing its first year of existence, contains four clubs, Gainesville, Toccoa, Buford and Lula.

The game in Gainesville Thursday, and the third game, if one is played, will be umpired by Coach Frank Anderson and Tubby Walton, of Atlanta.

Many of the players of the two teams which are battling for the championship are prominent college ball players. Cliff McGaughey, of George, and Scott Pullen, of Tech, play side by side on the Gainesville nine. Spurgeon Chandler is a hurler on the Toccoa club.

Lee Crowe manages Gainesville, and J. G. Gower directs Toccoa.

Kaye Don Escapes Death in Crash

BELFAST, Ireland, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Kaye Don, one of Great Britain's noted motor racers, suffered a broken rib and his mechanic was seriously injured when their car overturned and caught fire in the 410-mile Ulster Tourist trophy race of the Royal Automobile Club today.

The British driver, who only a few months ago went to America in an attempt to establish a new world's speed record, narrowly escaped death in the crash.

Another accident marred the race over the tortuous Ards circuit of 30 laps, when Captain A. C. R. Waite received a severe concussion as his car mounted a bank and overturned.

Thirty-six cars started in the event, driven by experts from Germany, Great Britain and Italy. Three Italians were leading this mid-afternoon in the hair-raising event.

Ray and Fager Win Invitation RelayRace

TORONTO, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Joie Ray, Chicago marathon runner, paired with August Fager, won the 30-mile invitation relay race at the Canadian national exhibition today.

Ray and Fager finished half a mile in front of Peter Simpson and N. B. McNamara, of Burlington, N. C., and Brisbane, Australia, respectively. Third place went to Harry Abramowitch and Sam Richmond, of New York. Each runner ran 15 miles.

Sixteen Lettermen Return to Georgia

Red and Black Coaches Hope For Great Amount of Reserve Strength.

ATHENS, Ga., Aug. 23.—When the University of Georgia football squad returns for early practice there will be among the candidates 16 players who have won their letters in football. This is the largest number of lettermen that the Georgia squad has returned in many years.

The large number of lettermen returning has, of course, raised the hopes of Georgia adherents to a high degree and this optimism is one of the handicaps that the football coaches will have to overcome. The fact that last year's team was composed largely of sophomores is responsible for the great number of letter-wearing veterans. Of the 16 lettermen that will return, 12 are juniors, and will be playing their second season for Georgia.

Numbered among the junior veterans are some of the university's best athletic prospects, as these 12 men include such stars as Spurgeon Chandler, Vernon Smith, Marion Dickens, Milton Leathers and Tommy Moran, each one an all-around athlete.

OTHER JUNIORS.

Other juniors are Weddington Kelley, end; Ralph Maddox, Jimmy Patterson, Tiger Bennett, all guards; Bobby Rose, tackle; Austin Downes, quarterback, and Jack Roberts, fullback. Of the four mentioned before, Chandler and Dickens are halfbacks, Vernon Smith is an end, Leathers is a guard and Moran a quarterback.

Other lettermen to return for their old positions are Captain Herbert Maffett, end; Spero Tassapoulas, center, and Armin Waugh and John Davidson, halfbacks. This fine nucleus of experienced men will give the coaching staff more opportunity to spend an extra amount of time on less experienced members of the squad, with the idea of adding to the reserve strength of the team.

In the six weeks of spring practice during the last college term a great amount of attention was devoted to the development of the six men that will be necessary to fill out a two-team roster.

TASK OF COACHES.

Along with the 16 veterans the coaching staff will have to find one end, three tackles, one center and one fullback. With these additions the lineup of two full teams can be approximated from among the returning lettermen.

The tackle department has worried the coaches no little since it was in this position that the greatest loss was felt. Three seniors held down the two tackle positions last year, and all of them have been graduated. Frisbee, Bryant and Stelling all have completed their three years of competition and their absence will be sorely felt.

The enthusiasm that is rampant in the hearts of alumni when the list of returning veterans is exhibited loses some of its spirit when the difficulty of the 1930 schedule is considered.

Numbered among the 10 games on the card are seven games with teams that will in all probability be as strong this fall as Georgia, and it requires no stretch of imagination to see where each one of these seven Saturday afternoons might find sorrow in store for the Red and Black in spite of excellent September prospects.

walked. Rosenthal singled, scoring Langford. Shirley grounded to Beck and he should have shut off a run at the plate but fumbled the ball and barely got Shirley at first while Sheehan was scoring.

Beck was in trouble in every inning except the fifth up to the sixth, when he got mired up again. Appling singled and Lamotte singled, sending him to third. Barron struck out. Appling scored when Krueger forced Lamotte. With one out in the seventh, Rosenthal singled. Johnston, who had replaced Shirley at first, rammed one down the third-base line that Protho took and heaved like it was a hot brick before Brazill had time to cover second. Brazil knocked the ball down but could not handle it.

Appling singled, scoring Rosenthal. Red Barron, the fleet-footed former football player, beat out his third straight bunt to start the eighth. Krueger, trying to bunt, popped to Berger. Hearn grounded in front of the plate and Berger threw to second, forcing Barron. Langford walked. When McDaniel let Sheehan's grounder sift through Hearn scored, but Brazill took the return and threw out Langford at third.

The Chicks wasted chance after chance when a hit would have put them in the ball game.

Jamestown Wins Union Hotel Stakes

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., Aug. 23.—(AP)—George D. Widener's Jamestown, undefeated two-year-old, won his third Saratoga stake victory and fourth race of the year today as he led four two-year-olds over six furlongs in the Grand Union Hotel stakes.

Joseph E. Widener's Novelist was second with Walter J. Salmon's Ladder third. The winner was quoted at the prohibitive odds of 2 to 9 and stepped the distance in 1:11 4-5.

Carrying the crushing impost of 130 pounds, Jamestown, with Pony McAtee in the saddle, set the pace from the rise of the barrier but was forced to extend himself in the final strides to gain a neck decision over Novelist, which closed very fast in the last furlong.

Jamestown has now won the United States Hotel stakes, the Saratoga Special and an overnight race in addition to today's stake. It was the first time, however, he has ever been extended. His margin of victory in the other races being three or four lengths.

Fights Attaway

Harley Baker, sensational soldier fighter, meets Stiles Attaway in the main bout of a fight card at Fort McPherson Thursday night. Baker learned from the instructors who taught Sergeant Sammy Baker.

BAKER, ATTAWAY MEET THURSDAY

Promising Young Battler After Attaway's Scalp at Fort.

Harley Baker, army battler, will attempt to flatten Stiles Attaway, Atlantan, Thursday night at Fort McPherson in the headliner of a fight which will determine whether tougher opposition shall be brought on for him or not.

Baker is one of the promising fighters at the post and great things are expected of him. Baker trained with Sergeant Sammy Baker, nationally prominent boxer, and expects to follow in his footsteps.

Attaway is a popular fighter and many Atlantans are expected out for the 34 rounds of fighting scheduled Thursday night in the Fort arena.

Battling Bohanon and "Ten Ton" Holt will meet in the semi-windup.

Paul Martin and Young Trowbridge meet in another bout on the card.

Lieutenant E. C. Mack, in charge of the fight program, plans regular matches this winter. A moderate sum will be charged to defray expenses of the fighters. Parking space will be furnished.

Dann Wins Second Asheville Tourney

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Carl Dann, Jr., of Orlando, Fla., acquired his second major Asheville golf title of the season here today by defeating Wilburn Baird, Asheville, 7 and 5, in the finals of the country club championship. Last week Dann annexed the Biltmore Forest invitation title.

Lefty Moody Breaks Second Hurling Mark

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Aug. 23.—(UN)—Lefty Jim Moody, recently bought by the Giants for $10,000 from the Charlotte Hornets, set another Sally league strike-out record today when he struck out 14 Asheville Tourist batters in seven innings. The new Giant won his game, 2 to 0, after Charlotte had dropped the opener, 3 to 0.

Mooney set an all-time baseball strike-out record when he fanned 23 men in a nine-inning game at Augusta several weeks ago. He attracted the attention of John McGraw to the extent that he scouted the husky Tennessean himself and bought him for 1931 delivery a few days later.

Mooney has struck out 157 men in 175 innings. Three times this season he equalled the Sally record of 13 fanned batters set in 1919 by Larry Cheney, of Charleston, S. C. Mooney is a graduate of East Tennessee Teachers' college. He follows school teaching as a winter trade.

GAMAGE SEES ROCKY PATH FOR WILDCATS

Kentucky Needs More Reserve Strength for Hard Schedule.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Aug. 23.—Harry Gamage, head coach of Kentucky's Wildcats, sees a rocky path ahead of his gridiron outfit this fall. Throughout his schedule of seven Southern conference games he does not see a single weak spot, and there is defeat staring him in the face should his first string backfield players get crippled at any time. And just how immune to injuries they will be is a real question, for three of them have undergone operations since last year.

This is Gamage's answer to those who picture a life of ease for the Wildcats this fall. And he has only to hint of Alabama and Tennessee, not to mention Washington and Lee, Virginia, Duke, V. M. I., and Sewanee, any one of which may give the south a surprise this season, in order to impress football followers that the Wildcats have a tough row to hoe this fall.

Sitting in his office at Lexington a few days ago, Gamage gave his opinion of each of the teams on the Wildcat schedule, his analysis being essentially as follows:

The Wildcats open with Sewanee at Lexington in a night game on October 4. Sewanee and Kentucky have met several times in the past and it is almost axiomatic that the winning score is not to be more than a touchdown.

SEWANEE STRONGER.

Sewanee, which had indifferent success last year, should have in uniform this season Bobby Worrell, a great halfback who was injured last year. His presence may put the Tigers up in the conference scramble. Worrell will be remembered in Kentucky as the halfback on a Tennessee military academy team who almost single-handed defeated Louisville Manual High school, 37 to 7, a few years ago.

Maryville, the only non-conference foe on the Wildcat card, comes to Lexington on October 11 and this team should be fairly easy for the Kentucky eleven, although the Highlanders are noted for their ability to stand up and give a superior team the fight of its life.

Following Maryville comes Washington and Lee and Virginia, in the order named. Both these teams have coaches who will be beginning their second year with their team, and both should be greatly improved over last year. Kentucky defeated Washington and Lee last year, 20 to 6, the second time in 30 years. The Generals lost only Hawkins last year, and will return to Stoll field with Williams, giant end, Mitchell, 200-pound fullback, Thibadeau, Maddox and other stars of last year.

THOMAS A STAR.

Virginia should have great running and passing attack built around Thomas, star back. Virginia was not on the Wildcat schedule last year.

Coach Wallace Wade will bring his Alabama eleven to Lexington for the fifth home game for the Wildcats. Kentucky has not defeated Alabama since 1921, the score being 6 to 0 last year. Since then the Crimson Tide has annually engulfed the Wildcats, and it will take a great battle to keep them from doing it again. Alabama lost Holm by graduation, but will bring Spinner Campbell, Suther, Sington and other of their stars to Lexington. Alabama is certain to have a powerful team this year.

Duke will be played at Durham, N. C., on November 8. Duke did not go so well last year, and will be out to make up for their 1929 record. They should provide plenty of trouble.

V. M. I. NEXT.

After this game the Wildcats return home to meet Virginia Military Institute on November 15. The Cadets lost several men by graduation but they always have played the Wildcats a hard game, usually showing up best in one-half of the game. Last year Kentucky won, but the Cadets had the lead at the end of the first half.

The season will come to an end with Tennessee's powerful Volunteers at Knoxville on Thanksgiving Day. For the last two years the Wildcats have tied undefeated, untied Tennessee elevens, knocking them out of conference championship. Tennessee lost their center and a tackle by graduation in June, but the powerful Hackman and McEver will be on hand this year, as will Bobby Dodd, at quarter, and Hug and Brandt at ends. Tennessee will be out for revenge this year and almost anything may happen.

To meet this powerful array of conference teams, Gamage finds himself with only one fairly satisfactory backfield, just as he had last year. Let injuries crop out, and the Wildcats may tremble out of the conference scramble, just a they did last year against Alabama when Kelly, Phipps and Covington were missing from the lineup.

and one of them was on the final green, where he learned the title belonged to him and he three-putted playfully. On his morning round he went out in 31 and came back with a 38. On the final he shot a 32 going out and a 35 coming back.

Sarazen's only defeat by par on his four rounds came the first day when he took a 73, one over perfect figures. He shot a 69 yesterday to take the lead and then salted it away with today's great scores.

Other leaders were Laurie Ayton, Evanston, Ill., 289; Bob Shave, Marion, Ohio, 291; Tony Manero, New York, 291; Emerick Kocsis, Detroit, 291; Harry Hampton, Chicago, 291; Chris Brinke, Detroit, 292; Johnny Farrell, New York, 293; Charles Guest, Detroit, 293; Neal McIntyre, Indianapolis, 290, and Ed Dudley, Wilmington, Del., 293.

A rocky road is ahead for the University of Kentucky Wildcats if one listens to Coach Harry Gammage, head gridiron mentor of the Bluegrass institution. However, there are many who look for good times ahead.

'GATOR DRILLS BEGIN SEPT. 8

Bachman To Call 50-Man Squad to First Practice.

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Football practice for the varsity squad of the University of Florida will begin Monday, September 8, Charles W. Bachman, head coach, announced today.

Approximately 50 members of the squad are expected to assemble on that date.

Florida faces one of the most difficult schedules in her gridiron history, meeting seven Southern conference foes, North Carolina State, Auburn, Georgia, Alabama, Clemson, Georgia Tech and Tennessee. An intersectional game with the University of Chicago also is carded.

Twenty letter men are expected to return for the 1930 campaign, including Captain "Red" Bethea, Ed Sauls, "Red" McEwan, Luke Dorsett, Link Silsby, Homer Seay, Jimmy Nolan, Charlie Vickery, Joe Hall, Ed Parnell, Wilbur James, Frank Clark, Jimmy Steele, Dale Waters, Bill McRae, Ben Clemons, Al Dedge, Carlos Proctor, Clarence Phil and Dashwood Hicks.

The 'Gator's first game will be played September 27 with Southern college.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 23.—What started as a pitching duel today ended as a free-hitting game, and New Orleans trimmed Nashville, 7 to 4.

Head, of Nashville, and his hill opponent, Barnhart, both pitched fine ball the first part of the game, but weakened at the last, Head being replaced by McColl.

PEBBLES 4; BARONS 1.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Little Rock made it two straight from the Birmingham Barons by winning tonight, 4 to 1. Lee Moon, Traveler left-hander, pitched great ball in the pinches, and the Barons' only run followed a break against them in the first inning, when a batted ball struck Umpire Campbell and went for a base hit. Holly, Koster and Griffin were the Little Rock punch.

AUBURN TIGERS HAVE LARGEST SQUAD IN YEARS

Coach Wynne Instructs 67 Men To Report for Practice.

AUBURN, Ala., August 23.—When Chet Wynne greets his Auburn football candidates on Drake Field, Labor Day, he is expected to have one of the largest squads that has ever assembled at the cornerstone for the initial practice of the season. Sixty-seven candidates for Wynne's first team at Auburn have been mailed letters instructing them to report for practice, Labor Day, September 1.

Of the number ordered to report early, 16 won the major football award last season, while the others were members of Coach McFaden's freshmen squad or saw service as substitutes. However, the "A" wearers will have to do a lot of work this fall if they retain their positions, as several sophomores made it known during the spring drills that they will be strong contenders for regular berths. Competition will be quite evident this year.

Missing from last year's team when the Tigers report Labor Day will be Howell and Grady Long, Charles Manley, Forney Yarbrough, Porter Callahan, Herman Jones and Jim Crawford. All except Manley are letter men, and started almost every game during the 1929 campaign.

It is true that a large number is expected to report for the opening practice, but punters among this group will be meager. The kicking department was weak last year, but Wynne might be able to develop a capable punter out of Grant, Chappelle, Jacobs, Tamplin, Cameron, Davidson or Hitchcock.

The Tigers' outstanding player last year, Dunham Harkins, will be back for his final year, and will again take up his duties at center. Harkins is captain, and is expected to make his final season in Orange and Blue moleskins his best.

Hutcheson Slips But Holds Southern Bat Lead by 3-Point Margin

BOLTON TAKES SECOND PLACE, POOLE IS THIRD

Sunny Jim Holds Fast to Home-Run Crown.

Failing to add points to his average during last week's play, Joe Hutcheson, Memphis outfielder, this week barely clings to the Southern Association lead by one point, having an average of .334, while Catcher Bolton, of Chattanooga, is second with a .391. Poole holds down his customary third position with .373, while Chapman, of Mobile, and Partridge, of Nashville, are tied for fourth place at .371 each.

Poole continues to be the cock of the walk in slapping out home runs. Sunny Jim has blasted out 46 homers, while Jay Partridge, his teammate, is his nearest rival, 38. Poole also has batted in the most runs, 151. Partridge again is Poole's keenest rival in that department, having batted in 112 runs.

Flashkamper, Memphis shortstop, has swiped his 45th base, putting well out in front in that division.

Nashville's Vols are hitting the ol' apple at the rate of .320, collectively, but do not seem able to turn their hitting in to victories, being hopelessly buried in the second division at this time. Atlanta is second in team batting, .311, while Birmingham's Barons are hitting .310 for third place.

In fielding, the Memphis Chicks hold sway, having an average of .966, which is two points better than the mark held by Little Rock. New Orleans is third with .963. The Lookouts have completed the most double plays, 137.

Pitching honors again go to Roscoe Shepherd, of Memphis, who has won 12 and lost 4. Billy Bayne, Chattanooga left-hander, won his 19th game last week, leaving him but one to go to reach the 20th victory mark.

S. E. SLUGGERS HIT LOW MARK

Pitchers Do Good Job as Batsmen Watch Averages Fall.

Batting in the Southeastern league is at its lowest mark of the current season. Pitchers are finding the sultry summer afternoons and warm moonlight nights under arcs to be conducive to jam-up twirling, hence none of the clubs are batting in the .300s. Selma is leading the league with a .293. Tampa is in second place, quite a few points back, .279, while Jacksonville is third, .273.

Radcliffe, of Selma, is the only hit-smith doing anything against the pitchers worth writing home about. The Selma slugger is smacking the ball at the pace of .371. His nearest competitor is Abernathy, of Montgomery, who is batting .349. Two Selma players follow Abernathy. They are Parks, .342, and Andrus, .338.

Besides leading at bat, Radcliffe is leading in runs batted in, 99, and also is the foremost home-run clouter of the league, having a total of 14 to his credit. Finlator, of Selma, is Radcliffe's most serious rival in hitting homers, having a total of 13.

Braley, of Tampa, has swiped the most bases, 31.

In fielding, the Jacksonville Tars are setting the pace with a .973, with Selma second, .968. Columbus has completed the most double plays, 56.

Brewer, of Selma, continues to set the pace for the pitchers, his record this week reading: 24 victories and 4 defeats.

Carrollton A. & M. Has 6 Lettermen

CARROLLTON, Ga., Aug. 23.—Six lettermen of last season's campaign will be on hand September 1, when Coach Luckey begins football practice at the Carrollton A. & M. school. A., Gordon, Clarksville A. & M., Powder Springs, Newman and LaGrange. There are three open dates.

TERRY CLINGS TO STICK LEAD IN SENIOR LOOP

National League Pitching Improves as Bat Marks Dwindle.

Bill Terry held his lead among National league batters this week despite the fact that he has faced strong pitching, and at the close of Thursday's games his average was .407. Babe Herman, like the rest of his mates, has been in a slump and in eight games and 29 times at bat was able to clout but seven hits, which brings his mark to .395, ten points below that of last week but good enough to leave him in second place. Klein is third, .392; Fisher, .388, is fourth, and Stephenson, .384, is fifth.

Klein and Cuyler are tied for the lead in scoring with 122 runs each, the brilliant Cub star having scored 12 runs in seven days. Klein leads in hits with 197, Terry having 196. The Philly slugger is also first in total bases, 345, and in doubles, 44. Comorosky has the most triples, 20, Wilson is first in home runs with 43, only one less than the mighty Ruth, and in runs driven in, 137, while Cuyler leads in stolen bases with 32.

With a team only one game above the .500 mark, Kremer has won 17 games and lost but 9. Malone with 15 victories and 6 defeats, Phelps with 12 and 5, and Phil Collins with 16 and 6, are the three leading regulars in percentage of games won.

Including Games of Thursday, August 21.

Army of Net Stars Begins Play in Georgia State Tourney Monday

GRANT ABSENT, MEET PROMISES REAL STRUGGLE

No Outstanding Favorite To Cop Bitsy's Crown at East Lake.

By Roy White.

Georgia's army of tennis players will start play at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon on the East Lake courts in quest of the Georgia state championship. Although the entry list closed late Saturday afternoon, it was learned that numerous other entries are in the mails and will be received today.

Pairings in the various departments of play will be drawn during the day, after all entries have been received. Jack Mooney, who will arrive in the city this morning in company with Bryan Grant, Jr., will be in charge of the drawings.

"BITSY" VACATIONS.

Bryan Grant, Jr., present champion, will not defend his 1929 title. Grant won the national clay court singles title in Kansas City several weeks ago and has been playing in recent eastern tournaments. He will not play in any other tournament except the national turf singles championship early next month.

Already more than 60 entries have been received for the men's, boys' and junior events, and a large majority of those are local entries. Members of the committee expect more than two dozen out-of-town entries which will be received today, making it one of the largest entry lists to be recorded for a state tournament.

The Atlanta Athletic Club is sponsoring the tournament, sanctioned by the Southern Lawn Tennis Association. The club will be headquarters for all visiting players.

COMMITTEE.

Jack Mooney is chairman of the tournament committee and will be assisted by F. C. Owens, Malon Courts and Jack Simpson.

Play in the men's singles will start at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon. All the boys' and junior events will start at 9:30 o'clock Tuesday morning and women's singles and doubles will be played at 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

With Grant definitely out and Mooney uncertain as to his playing, it will be a wide open affair with plenty of competition. Atlantans particularly are anxious to keep the crown in the city and realize that there are many outstanding tennis players from other sections of the state.

NO FAVORITE.

To pick out a favorite from the entry list would be a difficult thing as any one of a dozen players are likely to "get hot" and run through all opposition.

It will be a colorful tournament, despite the absence of Grant, for George Boynton, the national boys' double champion; Lefty Bryan, the Chattanooga ace; Ed Sutter, a brother of Cliff, and a host of others are entered.

Among those already entered for the men's events are Harry Gault, present city champion; Ralph Demott, Billy Armstrong, Owen Bugg, Kels Boland, Preston and J. T. Chambers, Reginald Fleet, Charles Gardner, Bob Nevitt, Pink Dobbs, Tom Galloway, G. C. Mitchell, Ed Van Winkle, Z. A. Rice, Bill Gossett, Allison Adams, Richard Whitehead, Eugene Ray, Ed Sutter, George Boynton, Julian Carr, Harold Walker, Lawrence Salley, Ross Cheshire, Bill Robertson, Billy Reese, Randolph West, Dr. Ralph Aiken, G. S. Aiken, Louis Enloe, Jack Boykin, Joe Green, Lawrence Jones, Lenoir Wright, P. L. Jennings, Jr., W. Dixon, Jr., C. E. Monfort, Allen Campbell, Jimmy Halverstadt, Al Halverstadt, Malon Courts and Jack Simpson. F. C. Owens, a former state and southern champion, is a member of the committee and may decide to play.

The out-of-town entries expected include Gus Fuer, of Miami; Silcox, of Charleston; Beckman and Baker, of Charlotte; Pan Pappadopoulo, of New York, and several other South and North Carolina entries.

Early entries for the junior events include: Pierre Howard, Gordon Massingale, Thom Tumlin, Hansford Sams, Randolph West, Winship Nunnally, Jr., Nelson Maynard, Lem Bracewell, Rex Godwin, Tod Bell, George Dennis, Paul Walker, Chris Conyers, Glenn Dudley, Jack English, Lester Brewer, Gilbert Stacy, Bill Kingdon and Goodrich Wright.

The boys' entry list includes Hal Pentcost, Alvin Cater, John Morris, David Aldrich, George McCarty, Max Milligan, Victor Kingdon, Eugene Brown and Cecil Goldstein.

BETHANY TAKES FIRST OF SERIES

Friendship Downed at 7-4 as Title Fight Opens.

The Bethany nine won the first game of the three-game series to decide the championship of the Sewanee league, defeating the Friendship Class, 7 to 4.

Mathews, on the mound for the winners, struck out seven and allowed only six hits, also contributing a homer to his team's advance.

McCrory hit two triples and a single out of five trips. Speaks hit two for three and Spear two out of five.

Tarbush, moundsman for the losers, pitched good ball, allowing only ten hits, but eight errors proved too great a handicap.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Aug. 23.—Howard Lawson blanked Montgomery with six hits here today and the Tars won the second game of the series, 3 to 0.

WHITTIER TAKES CITY LOOP TITLE

Southern Beaten for Second Half Crown—Play-Off Necessary.

Whittier Mills won the championship of the second half of the City league Saturday by defeating Southern Railway, 6 to 1. "Tiny" Osborne pitched a fine game, allowing only six hits and striking out seven men during the fray.

Sammons batted best for the winners, but every man on the team except one connected once for a safety. Sammons donated two, and knocked the only extra base hit of the day.

This makes a play-off between Southern Railway and Whittier necessary. Southern won the title for the first half and Whittier the second.

They will now play a three-game series and the winner of two will be crowned the City league champions.

Sande Is Beaten In Illinois Race

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 23.—(AP) Outlasting Reveille Boy and Earl Sande in a thrilling stretch finish today, Billy Champ and Tommy May scored a neck victory in the $3,000 Governor's Derby, blue ribbon racing event of the Illinois state fair.

Sande, who came to Springfield by airplane from New York to ride Charles E. Best's temperamental 3-year-old, gave his mount a characteristic ride, but the Warm stables' entrant had a little too much left and May got it out of him in time to win.

Sande rated Reveille Boy in third place until the half-mile post, then moved him into the lead with Billy Champ third until they hit the stretch, where May made his successful bid. The Keeneland Stud farms' Jean La Fitte was third, with Fetish, owned by Mrs. John D. Hertz, of Chicago, in fourth place.

Billy Champ covered the mile and a sixteenth in 1:43 2-5, fast time for any track.

Orchard Knob Wins From Center Hill, 7-6

The Orchard Knob team barely nosed out a win over the Center Hill nine by the tune of 7 to 6. The losers' ninth-inning rally just fell short by one run.

Appling, on the mound for the winners, struck out nine men and allowed only seven hits, and hit well, getting two out of three, as did Steele, his teammate.

Morgan contributed three for four, and Miner two for four. For the losers Mullin and Hollis each hit two for four. Moody and Steele for the winners, featured in defensive play.

Junior Players Set For Postponed Meet.

Capital City Club's junior golfers will qualify Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday for play in the annual Howard Beckett trophy tournament for the junior club championship. The tournament was scheduled to be played two weeks ago but was postponed on account of a large number of youngsters being out of the city.

Following the qualifying rounds match play will start Thursday and the tournament will be run off during the latter part of the week in order to be through by September 2 when the city amateur championship starts.

Every junior golfer in the club is invited to participate.

In addition to the Howard Beckett trophy there will be prizes for winners and runners-up in each flight.

Grass Tennis Courts Possible In Atlanta

Lack of Interest and Not Weather Conditions Explains Lack in South, Says Expert.

By Max Hall.

Bryan Grant, of Atlanta, won the national clay courts championship at Kansas City. Then he went up to the grass courts of the east and was eliminated from three tournaments, twice by Sydney Wood and once by Frank Hunter.

You can't expect Bryan to win all the time, but the fact remains that he is not yet at the top of his game on grass. He has played all his life on clay courts, and his game is suited to them. The technique of grass court tennis is different. It requires a lot of playing on grass to get accustomed to the different style of play.

The bald fact is that Bryan is not as good on grass courts simply because he has played on them very little.

And that brings up the question: Just why are there no grass courts in Atlanta?

A lot of people think they know why. If one asks a lot of people, one will get a lot of different answers.

Some say it is the soil. Others claim the hot climate keeps Atlanta from having grass courts. Many people will assert that it is positively impossible to keep up a grass court in Atlanta on account of weather conditions.

ALL BOSH.

But that is all bosh, according to Dr. Thomas P. Hinman, of Atlanta, member of the advisory board of the greens committee of the United States Golf Association. And Dr. Hinman ought to know. He has spent a great many years of his life studying grass—grass as adapted to golf greens, which are very like lawn tennis courts.

He has studied the technique of growing a smooth lawn of grass not only all over America, but also in England and in continental Europe. He has done a great deal of experimenting with different kinds of grass in Atlanta and this vicinity, and is now concerned with experiments on the Druid Hills golf course, which is one of about 12 such experimental stations in the country.

And he declares that the city of Atlanta could have a grass tennis court that would be just as good as the eastern courts, and that, furthermore, it would not cost any more to keep up. That the soil or the climate make it impossible is nothing short of ridiculous, he declared.

NO INTEREST.

"There is just one thing," Dr. Hinman declared, "that keeps Atlanta from having good grass courts for our players to practice on. And that is lack of interest. Atlanta never has been a great tennis town.

"Our players, like 'Bitsy' Grant and George Boynton, have just learned the game by themselves. Atlanta has no tennis coaches to teach our players. They are abundant in the east and west. Think of all the great golf instructors this city has had. How many tennis coaches have you seen?"

"And what kind of a gallery can you get for a tennis match in Atlanta?" he asked. "Hardly more than a handful of people have ever attended the free tennis matches held in Atlanta, even when good players are participating. Up north they have to turn them away at $2 a seat.

INTEREST GROWS.

"Oh, tennis is a coming thing in Atlanta," Dr. Hinman averred. "I am glad to see interest in it increasing all the time. But I am just telling you the reason why Atlanta has no grass tennis courts is just because nobody down here has enough real interest in the game to build one. The soil and climate are not the reason.

"There is plenty of clay here, and plenty of sand, and nobody down here has been willing to spend a little more money cultivating a grass court, when the clay is so handy. No club has been interested enough in tennis to do it. That is the reason."

Dr. Hinman, an authority on various types of grass, went on to say that the bent grass used in most grass surfaces up north has not yet been made to grow well in the south, but that Bermuda can be used, and used successfully. It grows in clay and will withstand the heat. Of course, it must be watered and kept well, and cut every day. But it would take no more care than the courts up north. One man, Dr. Hinman insisted, could easily keep up from three to six grass courts if he spent his full time on them.

NEW HOPE.

Perhaps the renewed interest that Bitsy Grant and George Boynton and the rest of Atlanta's tennis stars have been stirring up by their exploits this summer will cause "somebody" to have enough interest to build a grass court here, he said.

"It certainly would be a wonderful thing if the boys whom Atlanta is counting on for bigger and better achievements had a place to learn grass court play, he continued. It will not do for our stars to keep on cleaning up the world on clay courts and then go to the big grass court tournaments and lose because they have not had the experience."

GOLF LEAGUERS COMPETE TODAY

West End, Rome and Marietta Tied for Leadership.

West End, with Gene Cook, Pete Barnes, Marion Hawkins and Ed Murrah leading the attack, rules the favorite to win over Ingleside and retain its leadership. West End will end its season against Forrest Hills.

LOTT AND DOEG SEEDED FIRST

BROOKLINE, Mass., Aug. 23.—(AP)—George M. Lott, of Chicago, and John H. Doeg, of Santa Monica, Cal., were top seeded in the draw for the forty-ninth national doubles championship tournament here, starting Monday, which was announced today. Lott and Doeg will be defending the championship they won last year.

Johnny Van Ryn, of East Orange, N. J., and Wilmer Allison, of Austin, Texas, Wimbledon doubles champion, were seeded second. Following them in order were: William T. Tilden, of Philadelphia, and Francis T. Hunter, of New Rochelle, N. Y.; Berkeley Bell, Austin, Texas, and Gregory Mangin, Newark, N. J.; Frederick Mercur, Bethlehem, Pa., and Gilbert Hall, South Orange, N. J.; Wilbur Coen, Jr., Kansas City, and Harris Coggenshall, Des Moines, Iowa; Sidney B. Wood, Jr., and Frank X. Shields, both New York; Keith Gledhill, Santa Barbara, Cal., and Ellsworth Vines, Pasadena, Cal., and two foreign teams—John S. Olliff and Frederick J. Perry, England, and H. G. N. Lee and L. A. Godfree, England.

The first round draw lists 32 teams, including:

Tilden and Hunter vs. Booley Mitchell and Robert Considine, Washington, D. C.

Clifford Sutter, New Orleans, and Donald Strachan, Philadelphia, vs. Lieutenant G. W. Smith and Lieutenant R. M. Watt, United States navy.

Arnold W. Jones, Providence, and James Van Alen, Newport, R. I., vs. S. C. and J. L. Beaver, Gainesville, Florida.

BRYAN GRANT NEEDS ATTACK, TILDEN SAYS

Cliff Sutter, Sidney Wood and Ellsworth Vines Lead Selection.

By William T. Tilden II.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 23.—(NANA)—I have been home two weeks, during which time I have had a chance to see the group of young players who have come to the fore during my trip abroad and whom, though I have watched in the past, I have not had until now a chance to study.

There are three outstanding figures among this group, Clifford Sutter, Sidney Wood and Ellsworth Vines. Their order of importance from the standpoint of future greatness is Wood, Sutter and Vines.

I find in Sidney Wood, as he played at Southampton, much of genius and practically all the attributes of a champion. There is no real weakness in his stroke equipment. He has that intangible something called "touche" that marks Cochet, Lacoste, Borotra, Johnston and the others who were decidedly great. There is a certainty and authority to Wood's stroking that all the other boys lack.

GOOD MAN.

Yet it is not his strokes alone that make Wood so dangerous. He is a clever tactician. He has a widely varied game that he mixes according to his opponent's weakness. Wood is a born match player. Only such a born player could produce the sensational winners at match point or at the most critical moment of a match as Wood did to beat Lott, Shields and Allison at Southampton on successive days.

There was no luck to these shots. It was simply that in the crisis Wood picked out the only winning opening and played for it and above all made it. I consider Sidney Wood the most improved young player in America and showing all the earmarks of a coming champion.

Clifford Sutter is a fine tennis player. He has an easy all-court style with excellent court covering abilities. He lacks a great attack both in his strokes and temperament. He is a smooth working machine that will produce fine results for a long while.

WOOD BEST.

He should be a more consistent performer than either Wood or Vines, but I cannot see him becoming quite the player Wood promises to be. Sutter has excellent match temperament and good judgment but he needs to gain more speed of shot. There is no real weakness in his stroke equipment, yet there is no great strength either. He does not have any real killing punch in his game.

Ellsworth Vines is the opposite of Sutter. He has brilliant killing strokes in all departments, but like all players who go out for the kill on every shot he is prone to wildness, hitting streaks of errors that will beat him. Vines is not anything like the stylist Wood and Sutter are. There is not the east or certainty of stroke production.

On the other hand, he has far greater power than Sutter and possibly more than Wood. However, unless Vines adds a sounder defense to his attack I cannot see him as a future champion. Defense in these days is of equal importance with attack and Vines in his desire to hit every shot hard has sacrificed his defense.

ONE DANGER.

There is only one serious danger facing Sidney Wood. That is his own physical frailness. He overcomes much of this by his tremendous courage and nervous force, but the long grind of international tennis may prove too much for even Sidney's fighting spirit to overcome.

Vines, like Wood, is inclined to frailness, but his greater height gives him less work to do. Sutter, physically, is the soundest of the three, but he lacks the nervous energy so vital to success that marks both Wood and Vines.

They are three very promising youngsters. Wood and Sutter are certain first ten men this year, with Vines a most likely candidate.

Immediately behind the three I have mentioned one must place Bryant Grant, Jr., of Atlanta, and Richard Murphy, of Utica, N. Y. These boys are coming fast this year.

Grant, as national clay court champion, has a slight edge on Murphy. The Atlantan is a remarkable base line returner, featuring his ability to run more than he does his strokes. He must gain attack, if he is to go far. Murphy is a left-hander with a fine forehand and a clever match brain. He needs a better service and a sounder backfield before he can quite hit the top.

All in all, I think 1930 has uncovered a fine group of promising young stars with Sidney Wood as the outstanding prospect for a really great player.

GEAR SHIFTING PROBLEM ATTACKED BY AUTO ENGINEERS

LONG EXPECTED TASK UNDER WAY

Simplified Driving Process Sought by Manufacturers.

BY E. Y. WATSON.

(Written exclusively for The Constitution and the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

DETROIT, Aug. 23.—The automobile engineers are making a concerted attack on the age-old problem of gear-shifting.

This year and last, no less than 16 new transmission devices have been added to present American models. The aim is to simplify the process by which the average car is operated from the driver's standpoint. It has long been conceded that the "wobblestick"—a name that used to be applied to the gear-shift lever—should be changed.

The chassis engineers and their associates who collaborate with them on engine design, have sought for years to work out new methods. They have argued that there should be no earthly reason why a car should have to be put through hop, step and jump stages to get it under way. For such in effect is what conventional gear-shifting amounts to.

Substitutes have been tried but have not been generally adopted. Steam, as used in the "steamer" cars of years ago, got away from gear-shifting and was conceded to be one of the smoothest methods of both starting an engine and operating it through variable speeds. The steam cars were economical too, besides being silent and smoth-running. They failed to catch on largely because steam, as a power medium for all kinds of machinery, had been known and used for years without number and was deemed old-fashioned.

Gasoline power being newer, exercised a more potent appeal to the imagination of both engineers and public; therefore it stayed for motor cars and the gear-changing with it.

The next thing to be tried was the gas-electric. This type of power plant employed a gas engine to operate an electric generator. It let a car create the power that operated it as it travelled along, applying the current directly to the rear wheels.

In theory it was fine. As worked out, however, it proved about 25 per cent more expensive to build than the gas engine alone. It was heavier and, in motor car types, more expensive to operate and service. Nevertheless, it has found a place in bus and coach use where the loads are heavier and passengers pay fares. Steam has found partial use for the same purpose, but to a less extent.

In automobiles, the effort to improve the gear-shift began three years ago, and it has been taken up by the engineering departments of virtually all companies. It has resulted in a variety of devices, ranging all the way from four-speed transmissions to "free wheeling" and "syncro-mesh" mechanisms, all of which are coming into wide usage on cars in the higher price classes.

The merits and demerits of four speeds in place of the three associated with the term "standard gear shift" are still matters of debate among the engineering fraternity. By some it is held that adding a fourth or "double high" has advantages because it permits high car speed at lower crankshaft speed in the top range. Therefore it is a fuel saver and allows fast travel with less engine noise.

The four-speed engineers in effect divide the range between second and high into two, and use third to give faster acceleration than the conventional second gear. Opponents of this change point out, however, that such an arrangement means more shifting than by the older method because there are more positions in the gearbox.

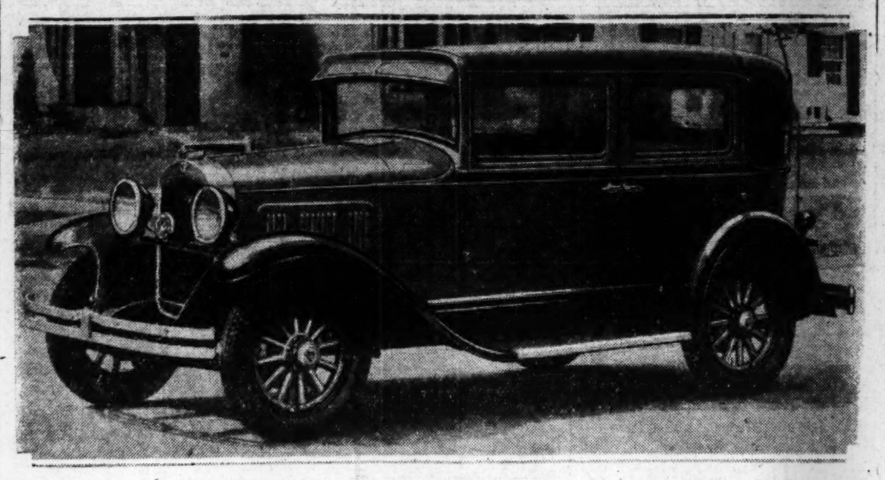

Besides use in automobiles, the four-speed principle also has been applied to trucks and commercial cars but in a different way. The useful fourth speed in this type of vehicle is an extra low gear for use in starting with an extra heavy load or pulling out of mudholes or through sand.

For free wheeling, the claim is that it eliminates use of the clutch except to start or go into reserve, and that economy of both fuel and oil becomes a worth-while factor.

Syncro-mesh, now applied to straight eights as well as the V-eight and V-sixteen types, allows gear-shifting with smoothness and no clashing at the higher speeds of which the engines are capable.

One advance with which virtually all transmissions can be credited as the result of recent research, is faster acceleration. The cars of two and three years ago were barely capable of producing 35 miles an hour in second gear, and were proportionately slower in getting under way from first gear. Now they flash away up to 45 to 50 miles an hour and beyond it, depending on the increased power that an engine may be capable of.

New Improved Whippet Makes Debut

The improved Whippet sedan, being presented by Willys-Overland, has a distinct air of quality and retains its position as the lowest priced four-door sedan in the world. Its spacious interiors accommodate five passengers. New couch-type upholstery add to its richness, while the exterior smart color combinations give it an entirely different appearance from its predecessor. The use of hydraulic shock eliminators, both front and rear, add materially to the car's riding comfort over all kinds of highways. The new Whippet models are being displayed in the show rooms of the W. A. Christ & Co., 17 North avenue, N. E., local distributors.

New Low Prices Announced By Hudson, Essex

Price reductions that make Hudson's Great Eight the lowest priced eight on the market, and enter the Essex in the industry's lower price range, were announced today by the Hudson Motor Car Company.

The reductions amount to as much as $355 in the case of the Hudson and run $110 and up in the case of the Essex. This is the lowest price at which Hudson and Essex cars have ever been offered.

Reduced new list prices are:

Hudson—2-passenger coupe, $885; coach, $895; rumble coupe, $925; standard sedan, $1,025; town sedan, $1,145; brougham, $1,195; sun sedan, $1,045; roadster, $995; 7-passenger sedan, $1,295.

Essex—Coach, $650; 2-passenger coupe, $650; rumble coupe, $685; standard sedan, $715; town sedan, $775; brougham, $795; sun sedan, $695; roadster, $695.

The Hudson has enjoyed sensational success this year, winning first awards in every peformance contest in which it was entered. Registrations of motor cars for the first six months of 1930 showed Hudson as the industry's largest selling eight. Essex likewise has won major awards in many contests, finishing second only to Hudson in the two major European road classics.

Baking Company Places Order for 204 Dodge Trucks

Total purchases of Dodge Brothers motor trucks by the Ward Baking Company during the first six months of 1930 amounted to 204 units, according to records of the national business sales department of the Dodge Brothers Corporation. These trucks were distributed to Syracuse, New York, Newark, St. Louis, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Providence, Columbus, Cleveland, Jacksonville, Chicago and Youngstown.

New Pressure Indicator In Use at Graham Plant

A new electrically operated engine indicator is now being used in the engineering laboratories at the Graham-Paige Motors Corporation to study carburetion, distribution, manifold design, and other characteristics of the power plants used in Graham sixes and eights.

This instrument, which has been developed by Claude E. Cox and his associates in the commercial engineering laboratories of Detroit, accurately records on paper indicator cards the pressures obtained in all of the cylinders of an engine throughout the entire cycle at the same time and in phase.

These pressure lines are drawn accurately to a scale which represents pressure in pounds per square inch so that the pressures may be measured at any point in the stroke of the piston.

For a motor to function smoothly and produce its maximum power and maximum economy, the pressure exerted on the pistons in the different cylinders must be all alike and be exerted at the same point in the stroke of the piston.

The pressures in the cylinders change so rapidly, particularly at high speeds, that until very recently it was impossible to measure them accurately to determine if the pressures were alike.

With this new instrument it is possible to show at a glance pressure conditions in all cylinders, locating immediately the cylinders below standard and the cause.

This instrument can be used on the road as well as in the laboratory, for it can detect the slightest unbalanced combustion conditions which would escape the attention of the most experienced driver.

Improved Whippet Is Presented By Willys - Overland

The most popular low priced car ever presented by Willys-Overland, the Whippet four, is making a further step forward in its class through a series of important mechanical improvements for longer life and artistic advancements which are expected to bring it to an even greater peak of popularity than heretofore attained.

Although the popular Whippet has kept ahead of current design and performance each year since its introduction more than four years ago, the improvements now incorporated in the car are the most advanced ever made in any one year.

The fundamentals of the improved Whippet are practically the same as its predecessor, while the new details which have been added give it greater beauty, increased riding comfort, exceptional smoothness, safety and longer life with no increase in price. The prices are $525 for the two-passenger coupe which is also available with rumble seat and $585 for the four-door, five-passenger sedan. The commercial chassis list at $360 f. o. b. Toledo, Ohio.

With a successful background of more than four years, the improved Whippet now brings added features to the field of the lowest priced cars in addition to those mechanical advancements first incorporated in the original Whippet. It has been the aim of the company since the first Whippet to make only those refinements from year to year that were necessary in order that this car might retain the position of mechanical superiority it has established. It is pointed out that the original Whippet in design, performance, quality, economy and long life, was so far in advance of the times that major changes have been unnecessary.

The improvements incorporated in the current model includes front and rear double acting hydraulic shock eliminators; internal four-wheel brakes, fully enclosed; engine mounted in rubber to absorb vibration; adjustable front seat in sedan; Klaxon horn mounted on front tie-bar between head lamps; new couch-type upholstery; flashing exterior combinations; newly designed lamps, hub caps and radiator filler cap.

These advancements are in addition to the other well-known Whippet features of powerful, speedy, high compression motor; "Finger-Tip Control;" full force feed lubrication; silent timing chain; oversize tires and extra heavy and long connecting rods.

Although the body lines in reality are unchanged, the improved car has a distinctly different appearance. This is accomplished in the part by the adoption of entirely new exterior color schemes with the outside of the roof matching the body paint. The appearance also is aided by the new arrangement of the hood louvres.

"Finger-Tip Control," which is used on all Willys-Overland products and has won so much wide acclaim among hundreds of thousands of owners, also is used. This enables the driver to control the starting of the engine, operation of the lights and sounding of the horn from a single control button in the center of the steering wheel.

With car buyers today, more than ever before, investing their money in automobiles that are built upon a basis of quality, performance, economy and longer life, officials of the Willys-Overland company state that they expect the improved Whippet to win the widest public acceptance in Whippet history.

Specially Designed Equipment Is Used At Oakland Plant

Seventy-five per cent of the 1,900 electrically-driven precision machines which make parts for the engines of the Oakland eight and the Pontiac six are especially designed to specifications worked out by the engineers of the Oakland Motor Car Company.

Thousands of jigs, tools and fixtures also are built exclusively for the company in order to meet the exacting Oakland-Pontiac standards of precision. Even the 284 test stands used to test Oakland and Pontiac engines before installation in the cars are of special design. On these stands the engines are hooked up "in tandem." An engine which already has been "run in" provides power to "run in" a new engine fresh from the motor assembly lines. Later, this second engine performs the same service for a third.

More than 600 machines using special tools and fixtures contribute toward the accuracy with which Oakland and Pontiac axles are built, operations held to such close limits that they are comparable to the methods used in the manufacture of fine watches.

Special dies, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, are used in the immense sheet metal department where ponderous presses, exerting hundreds of tons of pressure, stamp out fenders and similar parts.

This policy of using special equipment includes even the 470 fixtures on the Oakland-Pontiac engine assembly conveyor lines which carry production parts to the point of assembly.

Studebaker Conquers Mountain Washington In Record Time

Studebaker's new free wheeling President Eight has smashed all existing records, both for stock and specially built cars, up Mt. Washington, father of the "Great White Hills," and highest of all New England peaks. The car was a strictly stock free wheeling President Eight roadster piloted by Ab Jenkins, famous racing driver.

The President's record for the climb, of 14 minutes and 23 seconds, was 26 3-5 seconds better than the special car record set in 1928, and 2 minutes 37 seconds better than the former stock car record established eight years ago. To cap his feat for a "perfect day" Jenkins then made the up and down trip in 29 minutes 20 1-5 seconds, cutting almost 10 minutes from the previous round trip record.

The ascent was witnessed and officially timed by a representative group of local newspapermen, among them J. C. Kerrison, of the Boston Post, who has assisted in the timing of nearly every important motor climb up the mountain since 1904. Describing Jenkins' dramatic race to the clouds, J. E. Yarbrough, Studebaker dealer here, said:

"The famous motor road to the summit of Mt. Washington, conceded to be one of the hardest climbs in America, winds its way up eight miles of 26 per cent grade with 52 cross water culverts and 99 sharp turns. It ascends 4,700 feet to the top where Summit House and Old Tip Top House afford thousands of visitors yearly a beautiful panorama of the surrounding country.

"It was early morning when Jenkins made his dash. Timers were sent to the summit while others remained at the base. Clouds concealed the peak of the famous mountain. Undaunted, Jenkins got under way, sending his free wheeling Studebaker at high speed across the starting line at Glen House, located at the base of the grade. Rocks and dirt flew behind his wheels as he made his dash up the first mile and a half. Steadily climbing, Jenkins reached the halfway house in 6 minutes 37 seconds.

"Then came the real trial, as Jenkins sped up the four remaining miles through the famous S turn bordering Great Gulf, where the slightest mistake meant instant disaster to both man and machine, and the sharp hairpin bend two miles from the peak.

"Without stopping at the top to do more than turn around, Jenkins began his return trip. At the turn from the shelf at the summit, Jenkins hit a large boulder. No damage. Backing out he continued his descent.

"During the run up the mountain the clouds cleared away sufficiently to permit onlookers at vantage points to witness what one of the local newspapers termed 'an exhibition of sheer daring, driving ability and car performance.' On completion of the climb, E. C. Libby, who for years has watched over the mountain road and is well known to every aspirant for honors up this famous grade, expressed the opinion that Jenkins' feat was one of the most daring climbs he had ever witnessed."

Big Sales Volume Reported by Local Seiberling Dealers

The three Atlanta Seiberling Tire dealers, Brooks-Shatterly Co., at 1643 Jonesboro road, Lakewood; Miller Service, at 3070 Peachtree road, N. E., Buckhead, West Peachtree and North avenue, 2161 Peachtree road, N. E., and West End Tire & Battery Co., at 774 Gordon street, S. W., report that during the current season they have sold over eight solid carloads of Seiberling tires to Atlanta motorists since announcing their policy of selling first-line tires at carload prices.

By pooling their purchases of Seiberling tires from the factory they are able to obtain the lowest factory prices. This enables them to sell first-quality Seiberling tires at prices usually asked for second-quality tires. Atlanta motorists have been quick to see the genuine values this plan offers them and have shown their appreciation of the fact that the Seiberling factory does not sell auto manufacturers or others at less than costs of production which it must make up on sales to car owners.

Seiberling tires are sold through some 5,000 independent dealers who stake their future success on how Seiberling tires perform on the road and back up their sales efforts with a type of service born of their personal interest in their customers' welfare and satisfaction.

CHRYSLER ENLARGES DEALER ORGANIZATION

Company Prepares for Return of Normal Business.

In the first six months of 1930, all cars sold in the United States numbered 1,653,519, or 76.72 per cent of the total sales numbering 2,155,352 in the corresponding period last year. Excluding Fords, Chevrolets and Plymouths, the total sales of cars in the higher-priced ranges in the first six months of this year were 441,158, or 51.7 per cent of the 853,100 cars in this price range sold in the corresponding period last year. Chrysler Motors (excluding Plymouths) sold during this same period 101,836 cars, or 70.32 per cent of the 144,820 high-price range cars sold in the first six months of last year.

June registration figures show Plymouth in third place, Chrysler in fifth place and Dodge in sixth place in the number of automobiles sold in that month in the United States.

Retail sales of all makes of automobiles in the United States in June were 67.51 per cent of the number sold in June last year. The combined retail sales of Chrysler, Dodge, De Soto and Plymouth cars in June were 69.58 per cent of the number sold in June last year. Excluding sales of Ford, Chevrolet and Plymouth—the three cars in the low-price range—the total sales of high-priced cars represent 47.2 per cent of those sold in June last year, while sales of Chrysler Motors other than Plymouth numbered 65.13 per cent of the sales of the same class in June last year.

Chrysler Motors shipped to dealers 21,779 automobiles in July compared with 27,211 for the same month last year. This is relatively the best showing made so far this year, being 80 per cent of last year's shipments of the same month while total shipments for the first half of this year were only 65 per cent of the first half of 1929. Plymouth shipments were nearly twice those of July last year.

It is obvious from the foregoing that the great reduction in total volume of business cannot but result in unsatisfactory earnings. The gratifying phase of the situation from the Chrysler viewpoint is that Chrysler Motors is enlarging its dealer organization and is improving its relative position in the industry. This fact gives reason for confidence that when normal business resumes the Chrysler Corporation will be in a more favorable position, relatively, than when the slump in business started.

Price Reductions Announced By Chevrolet Motors

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 23.—Price reductions of $40 on all sport models in the Chevrolet six passenger car line were announced here today by H. J. Klingler, vice president and general sales manager of the Chevrolet Motor Company.

The models affected are the sport roadster, which is now priced at $515; the sport coupe, reduced to $615; the club sedan, now $625, and the special sedan, $685. All models formerly were priced $40 higher.

This latest move of the company brings the price range of the Chevrolet six to less than the range of the four-cylinder Chevrolet at the time of the changeover at the close of 1928. At that time the four was priced from $495 to $715, while the nine different passenger models in the six-cylinder line today range from $495 to only $685, following this latest reduction.

The move of the company comes directly after the announcement that wire wheels may now be had as optional equipment without extra cost on any Chevrolet six passenger car.

several mechanical innovations. Its price range is from $1,345 to $1,530. The century six develops 70 horsepower, and has a speed in excess of that figure, while the power development of the new eight is 90 at 3,200 revolutions per minute. This model is fast, having a road speed of 75 miles an hour and amazingly flexible getaway.

The 1931 models of the series "C" 100-horsepower Hupmobile, while one of the higher powered cars now on the American market, is moderate in price. Its list prices range from $1,695 to $1,880. This model develops a speed of 80 miles an hour and is unusually flexible in performance. There are six body types in this series, of which the coupe and convertible cabriolet have rumble seats. The other body types are the five-passenger sedan, five-passenger victoria coupe, seven-passenger phaeton and five-passenger town sedan. It was this car which originally introduced in this country a single decorative motif on all equipment and interior hardware.

CHAMBER TO SPONSOR ACCOUNTANTS' GROUP

Meeting Scheduled To Perfect Plans for Local Chapter.

Under the sponsorship of the industrial bureau of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, a committee appointed by Ivan Allen, chairman of the bureau, plans to organize in Atlanta a chapter of the National Association of Cost Accountants. A meeting has been called for September 8, at which time all those active in this field, or interested in the subject of better cost accounting, are to gather and perfect such an organization.

"In our work with industry during the past five years," said Mr. Allen Saturday, "the industrial bureau has been impressed with the weight placed upon cost accounting by the concerns attracted to this city. And so much emphasis has been placed on Atlanta's advantages in lowering the cost of manufacture that we are especially keen about stimulating more careful analysis of costs in every field of commerce in Atlanta.

"The National Association of Cost Accountants is a sort of idea-exchange by which Atlanta business houses may profit if their accountants or executives become members. The practices in the field are constantly improved, and the facts unearthed by scientific cost accounting are of tremendous value in guiding and directing business as a whole. We feel, therefore, that Atlanta business will gain tremendously if our business men can get the contacts which will come as the result of organizing a chapter here."

The committee on organization appointed by Mr. Allen is composed of J. J. Doran, Davison-Paxon Company, chairman; E. W Gottenstrater, Touche-Niven and Company; Charles M. Wajt, Jr., Retail Credit Company; Paul M. Williams, E. L. Rhodes Company; E. G. Fields, William H. James Company; E. W. Pohl, Tabulating Machine Company, and J. Lockwood, Powers Machine Company. With the co-operation of others interested in the movement, the committee expects to develop an attendance approaching 200 for the organization meeting.

The National Association of Cost Accountants has a membership of more than 6,000, and includes not only those actively engaged in the work, but executives who are aware of the importance of cost accounting to business, and junior accountants who are anxious to study and perfect themselves in this important phase of management.

Conserve Resources Advises Official Of Oldsmobile

"With our natural resources dwindling fast, sportsmen and automobile tourists must adopt a rigid code of conservation or soon our land will be without forests, fish or fowl," according to Captain Frank Winch, sportsman, writer and lecturer on outdoor life who is making his ninth transcontinental automobile tour in the interests of conservation. Captain Winch is making the trip in an Oldsmobile sedan with de luxe equipment.

"Plain thoughtlessness which leads to a disregard of the rights of others forms one of the chief enemies of conservation," said Captain Winch. "Included in this category are the automobile tourists who tear up wild flowers by the roots, damage trees and leave campfires burning at the risk of igniting an entire forest. Also, are the so-called sportsmen who catch fish or kill game far beyond their needs or requirements.

"The great outdoors, with which this country is so bountifully supplied, should be the recreational ground for all citizens, rather than for a selected group. Each of us who leave home for a vacation trip should remember constantly that the parks, forests, mountains and streams are ours only to use and not to abuse—that when we destroy anything we are literally robbing thousands who follow us."

During his trip this year Captain Winch is making a number of stops en route to address civic groups and luncheon clubs in the interest of conservation. In his previous cross-country tours, he has driven larger automobiles. This year, however, to test the automotive advancements which have made possible ample power, dependability, comfort and handling ease in a smaller car, he decided to become an Oldsmobile owner.

"The Oldsmobile impresses me as being a real representative of conservation. It has provided me with all the fine features of automobile performance conserved in a smaller space and at lower cost. For the trip between New York and San Diego the total expense for gasoline, oil and greasing my Oldsmobile was less than $50," he said.

State's Virtues Are Told In Farm Board Pamphlet

Descriptive Booklet, Just Off Press, Sets Forth Resources.

BY R. E. POWELL.

The good and the bad of Georgia, the billion-dollar-plus Empire State of the South, has just been interestingly told in an attractive 232-page booklet issued, in limited quantity, by the Georgia department of agriculture.

There is told, for instance, the story of the growth of the poultry industry—eggs, pullets, hens and a few barnyard roosters—until today it is valued at $40,000,000. And, even so, Georgia sends out of the state annually for eggs alone, the booklet shows, more than $7,000,000.

Millions, both in measure and money, race through the pages of this book in a romantic story that Commissioner Eugene Talmadge said is told "to renew and strengthen the faith of the citizens of Georgia in their state and to call attention to the many advantages enjoyed by them in this commonwealth." In addition, Mr. Talmadge explains in an introductory note, "it is intended as a source of information as to the opportunities offered in this state to those persons who may consider coming here to live."

Honey Industry Grows.

Honey, whether you knew it or not, is produced in an amount annually exceeding a million pounds. Over 3,000 farmers are annually cultivating 200,000 colonies of bees and Georgia produces more and better honey than any state in the south. First settlers, the book reminds, kept bees in log gums and domesticated them until the advent of saw mills when the hives were made of lumber. This method after lasting a century was supplanted about 40 years ago when modern, movable frame hives were built.

But with the sweet comes the sour. Georgia imports the meat produced annually by a million hogs grown in other parts of the United States and 40 per cent of this is in backs and bellies. She exports, to other states—or did last year—only 445,000 and produced in addition, for use at home or sale to nearby slaughter pens, only 783,000.

Another matter bearing on Georgia's weak spot—its consistent failure to produce at home the stuff its people require for food—is depicted in a table bearing on the lowly, but classic, cabbage. South Georgia and the Sea Island territory can produce cabbage to put on the market at peak time. But (while this isn't stressed in an official document) it is notorious that these cabbages go to other markets because transportation costs via motor truck are cheaper. Georgia's roads have not yet been developed to a point where home-grown produce can move to local markets economically enough to guarantee a profit.

Peaches, Watermelons.

The city of Atlanta, the bureau of markets reports, imported in the year 1929, 384 carloads of cabbages, 130 of which came from as far away as the Lone Star state of Texas. Out of 424 cars consumed by Atlanta cabbage eaters, only 60 were grown in this state.

Yet Georgia produces more than 20 bushels of peaches for every man, woman and child in the state. It produced last year enough peaches for every man, woman and child, white and black, to eat one-half bushel of peaches. Georgia has more peach trees than any other southern state and produces one-third of all the peaches sold in the entire United States.

Watermelons stand out in the minds of American people as a peculiarly Georgia product and they have made this state famous because of their delicious flavor, superb sweetness and beauty. From the "brag" melons, weighing 130 pounds, down to the smaller 30-pound ones grown by melon lovers on tiny plots of ground in the city of Atlanta, the state produces the best known varieties.

Division of Wealth.

Georgia's "over-a-billion" wealth is divided among farm products, live stock, factory products and minerals mined. Farm products and live stock account for approximately one-third of the entire total of $1,201,747,866 and reached last year the huge total of $396,015,000.

"From farm and factory, mine and forest, river and sea," reads the story, "Georgia citizens, through their industry and genius, produce annually commodities valued at more than a billion dollars in the marts of the world. If, perchance, a Chinese wall completely circled her far-flung borders, Georgia's near three million citizens could continue to live and thrive for within the state are natural resources sufficient to produce the necessities of life and many of its luxuries."

A clasification of the state's farm and live stock products shows:

'LOAN SHARKS' ENJOY BETTER CLASS TRADE

With economic conditions "fast approaching normal," a higher class of society has turned to the so-called loan shark system of financing, according to a statement made Saturday by the Atlanta Association for the Prevention of Moral Usury, an organization formed to combat usurious rates of interest alleged to be charged by certain small-loan concerns.

In a circular letter to "every employer in the city," it was explained, the following statement is set forth by the association:

"May we call your attention to the fact that economic conditions (now fast approaching normal) have deprived thousands of people of credit previously extended them and brought them face to face with great sacrifice on one hand or loan sharks on the other. Six months ago the loan sharks in Atlanta for very practical reasons refrained from extending further credit to their natural clientele on account of difficulties of collection, due to the fact that that particular clientele was not ashamed to go into court to prevent further exploitation.

"However, due to the above-mentioned economic readjustments of our credit structure they have found a much higher class of society desperately eager for loan shark money and willing to pay any price to keep the new financial connection a secret."

The statement adds that it is hoped that with the co-operation of "personnel officers working with the office employes" in Atlanta, the usurious lenders will not be able "to effect the same slavery of these new customers as he formerly did with the poorest people of Atlanta."

POSTOFFICE ACTION URGED BY RAMSPECK

In an effort to hasten actual construction work on the authorized new postoffice and federal building for Atlanta, Representative Robert Ramspeck, of the fifth Georgia district, has written officials at Washington in charge of the work, urging that condemnation proceedings be started, if necessary, to secure the government's deed to the downtown site of the project, he announced in a statement Saturday.

Mr. Ramspeck's statement follows:

"Shortly after my election last fall to fill the unexpired term of the late Congressman Steele, Messrs. Ferry K. Heath, assistant secretary of the treasur . and John W. Philp, fourth assistant postmaster general, came to Atlanta to inspect sites for Atlanta's new federal building.

"At that time no appropriation had been made, but an authorization had been passed providing for a total expenditure of $2,100,000 and limiting the cost of the site to $450,000. This authority had existed for eight or nine months, but little progress had been made.

"Today the authorization for the Atlanta project has been increased $550,000, or to a total of $2,650,000; the site has been selected, and work has begun on the examination of the titles. The money has been appropriated and became available on July 1.

"Since the visit to Atlanta of Messrs. Heath and Philp last fall, I have been in constant touch with the situation and have constantly urged the matter toward a conclusion.

"Certain legal complications have arisen as to securing proper title to one or two parcels in the site selected. One of these involves a lease, while the other parcel has loans on it totaling considerably more than the amount the government is willing to pay. It is probable that it will be necessary to condemn this tract of land, and I have written the officials in Washington urging that immediate action be taken to acquire this tract through such proceedings. Of course, I am not in position to pass upon the value of this tract.

"Mr. Heath has assured me that careful consideration will be given to the question of the advisability of employing a local architect to be associated with the government architect on this project.

"The people of Atlanta may be assured that this matter will have my constant attention to the end that Atlanta may have its new federal building at the earliest possible date."

Three Injured When Train Strikes Auto

Three persons narrowly escaped death Saturday afternoon when the car in which they were riding was struck a glancing blow by an inbound Central of Georgia passenger train at the Lee street crossing, near the Campbellton road.

Rufus Pennington, 66, of 556 Mayland circle, driver of the car, was badly shaken; his daughter, Esther, 13, incurred severe bruises, and Miss Frances Hart, 13, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hart, of Nashville, Tenn., visiting friends in Atlanta, sustained lacerations about the head and painful bruises of the body. Physicians at Grady hospital declared the girls' injuries were not serious.

Mr. Pennington was driving the two girls to a swimming pool when the accident occurred.

Atwater Kent Radio Audition Heads Selected

With appointment of district chairmen in the Atwater Kent Foundation's fourth national radio audition completed for Georgia in all but one instance, progress in the classic event of radioland was reported Saturday to be making rapid strides.

In view of the nationwide importance that was attached to the previous annual auditions of the foundation, this year's activity has been penetrating increasingly widening circles, Georgia officials of the movement stated.

Saturday's announcement contained the names of 11 of the 12 district chairmen to be appointed by Mrs. Wilbur L. Moore, state chairman for Georgia. Only the chairman for the second district, comprising the area about Camilla, Tifton, Albany, Cairo and other southeast Georgia towns, remains to be named.

While this vacancy is expected to be filled within the next few days, enrollment blanks may be procured, meanwhile, by communicating with Mrs. J. M. Lennard, fifth district chairman, 720 Church street, Decatur. When filled out by candidates, these are to be returned to Mrs. Moore, at 63 Eleventh street, Atlanta.

The appointments of district chairmen announced Saturday follow:

First District—Mrs. M. B. Nichols, 510 Maupin avenue, Savannah.
Third—Mrs. A. C. Richardson, Montezuma.
Fourth—Mrs. John O. Methvin, 908 Second avenue, Columbus.
Fifth—Mrs. J. M. Lennard, 720 Church street, Decatur.
Sixth—Robert H. Williams, Robert H. Williams Music Company, Macon.
Seventh—Mrs. J. M. Proctor, Rome.
Eighth—Miss Jennie Bell Smith, 530 Oglethorpe avenue, Athens.
Ninth — Miss Mary Whitson, Gainesville.
Tenth—Mrs. George Craig, Montgomery building, Augusta.
Eleventh—Miss Lillian Price, 605 Reed street, Waycross.
Twelfth—Mrs. H. A. Threlkeld, Vidalia.

Largest Enrollment Indicated for Schools

Registration of new students in the Atlanta public schools is the largest in the history, it was announced Saturday by M. E. Coleman, director of census and attendance.

He urged all parents of children who will be entered in the system with the term beginning September 8 to see that they are registered this week.

Last year the total registration for all schools was 64,851.

Registrations for the last two weeks have average more than 100 a day, according to Coleman, and this week is the last full week of registration before the children are expected to report to their respective schools September 3.

"Unless registration is made this week, we cannot guarantee that the child will get a seat in the schools nearest to its home," he said. "We will have seats for all of them, but some of the schools are going to be crowded and many of the last-minute registrations will be shifted."

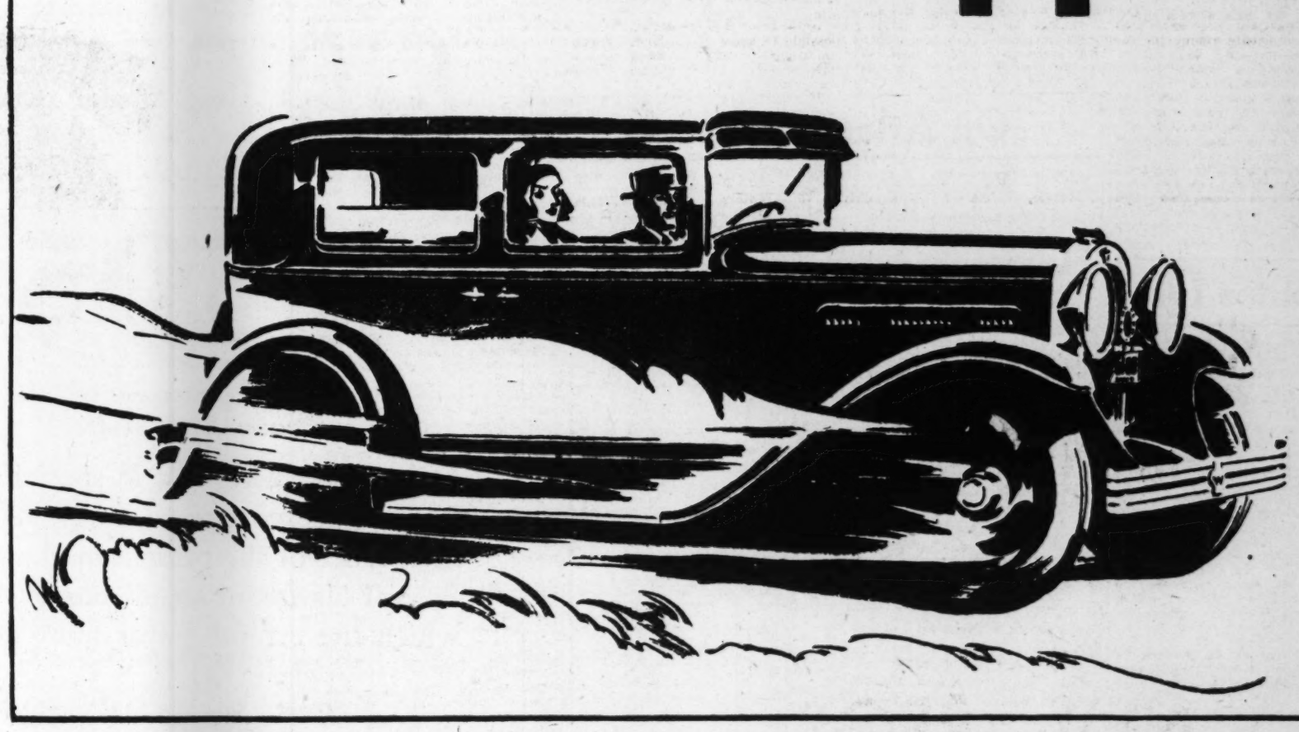

Air Races Visitors To See Huge Beacon

The "Lindbergh Beacon," said to rival the sun itself in brilliance, which was recently installed atop the Palmolive building, one of the tallest structures in Chicago, will be dedicated during the national air races to be held there late in August when its beam of light, measuring two billion candlepower in intensity, will flash for the first time across the sky on Chicago's famous lake front. The beacon stands on a 75-foot steel-aluminum tower on the roof of the building and includes, besides the large, revolving light, a smaller fixed light of 11 1-2 million candlepower which will always be focused on the municipal airport.

The arc of the Lindbergh beacon, measuring half an inch in diameter, is said to develop about 800 candlepower per square centimeter, only 150 candlepower less than that developed in a similar space on the sun.

STATIONS SEEKING POWER INCREASES

35 Cleared Band Broadcasters Have or Ask for 50 Kilowatts.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—Trend toward increased power for broadcasting stations is shown in the increased number of applications received by the radio commission during the last two months for authority to use 50,000 watts on cleared channels. At present there are nine applications pending before the radio board for construction permits for erection of 50 kilowatt transmitters.

While the commission has suspended hearings on applications for changes in power and allocation until fall, it is expected that few of the stations will receive permission to erect such stations. The commission virtually gave its opinion on the use of superpower when it ruled recently to limit the number of cleared channels to 20. Increased demand for higher power is said to have resulted from the board's decision.

Maximum Power.

At the present time the maximum rating for broadcasting stations is 25,000 watts on an experimental basis, nine station operating on exclusive channels. Of the 51 stations now assigned to the 40 channels reserved for exclusive use, 35 are either licensed to use this amount of power, have construction permits or have filed applications for increase.

While the commission is hesitating over the assignment of 50,000-watts power to stations, engineers throughout the country are urging that additional power be employed. They contend that it virtually results in far better reception to listeners, by greatly increasing the service area of a broadcaster and lessens static interference by increasing the ratio of the signal to the static level. This requires less volume on the receiving set and has the tendency to blanket out electrical disturbances.

On the other hand, several members of the radio commission hold that the additional power is a cause of interference, particularly where listeners are located near the powerful transmitters. These commissioners are in favor of lower-powered stations transmitting programs of local interest.

50-Kilowatt Service Area.

The normal service area of a 50,000-watt broadcasting transmitter, according to the engineers, is approximately 125 miles. Greater distances may be covered, but this is the reliable distance at which the station is audible both day and night and under all kinds of conditions.

While 20 stations have filed applications for construction permits to use 50,000 watts, station KDKA is seeking to employ a power of 400,000 watts for experimental broadcasting during hours after midnight. If the commission grants KDKA authority to erect such a transmitter, it will be the most powerful in the world. At present there are several stations in Europe using 100,000. Station WGY, at Schenectady, several years ago, under special permission, transmitted several test programs with 100,000 watts power.

Many engineers contend that present broadcasting receiving sets are entirely too sensitive, and that less sensitivity should be used and more power in broadcasting transmitters. They draw analogies with modern electrical appliances, pointing out that the modern electric iron consumes 600 watts, which is considerably more than radiated by many broadcasting transmitters.

Another Victor Herbert program, in response to a steady stream of written and telegraphic requests from every section of the continent, will be presented in the Atwater Kent Radio House at 7:15 o'clock this evening over WSB and the NBC, with Lewis James, tenor of the famous Revellers, as soloist and the Atwater Kent Concert orchestra directed by Josef Pasternack.

This program of Herbert music—the third to be given in the present summer series—will show the versatility of the great Irish-American composer. Scores of light operas, literally hundreds of songs, two grand operas and innumerable orchestral and string ensemble pieces were turned out by Herbert. Critics are still confounded by the fact that practically every type of light opera and musical composition to which the composer turned his hand remain standard program pieces.

The entire plan, melodic conception and cadenza in the last part are all thoroughly original and typical of Liszt in his most effective style.

Others participating include Louise Bave, soprano; Westell Gordon, tenor; Hannah Klein, pianist, and the Southernaires, a male quartet.

Predominantly sentimental are the musical numbers sung and played in the unique style of the Chase and Sanborn Choral Orchestra under Frank Black's baton by a group of radio's prominent soloists and musicians this evening at 6:30 over WSB and the NBC.

Suggestive of the languid moods of Spain is "With My Guitar and You," which Muriel Wilson, soprano, and Frank Luther, tenor, sing in an original duet arrangement of Director Black.

By way of musical contrast comes "My Future Just Passed" played in the lively, two-piano version of Ohman and Arden, whose racy interpretations are also heard in fragmentary patterns throughout the ensemble selections.

The "Muted Singers," an original wordless chorus, conceived by Black and Co-director Gus Haenschen, present in slow tempo "Venetian Love Song."

ISN'T IT FUNNY?

We who live in the cities read of the bottom dropping out of the grain market, of wheat prices becoming so low that it is hardly worth while to reap the wheat, and still we pay just the same old six, eight or 10 cents for a small loaf of bread. No matter how cheap wheat and flour become the city consumer never seems to get a single penny reduction. That is a mighty funny thing. Somebody is apparently able to annul the laws of nature. "You can get around the law of supply and demand," a break down in prices of grain, and still the man in town pays the same price for bread. With wheat less than 90 cents a bushel we seem to be no whit nearer the old five-cent loaf. There is something over-ripe in Demark.—The Pathfinder.

The United States is said to have the highest murder rate of any civilized country. At that it is really a whole lot lower than it might be when one considers the number of people who deserve it.—The Pathfinder.

Papa—Willie, I hear that instead of going to Sunday school you played baseball.

Willie—It isn't true, Dad—and I've got a string of fish to prove it.—The Pathfinder.

PHIL DEWEY

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Two college degrees and a reputation as something of a bibliophile have not hindered Phil Dewey in his rise as a radio baritone.

Besides being one of the best looking young men active in the radio world, Phil is known to loyal dialtwirlers as a regular soloist on a number of chain programs and the cornerstone of the "Men About Town" trio.

That word bibliophile has a bad sound, of course, but it really means booklover. On the air it is immediately apparent that Phil is even more a music lover than a devotee of literature as such. But then, it must be remembered that his first musical activity, on the farm where he was born, near Macy, Ind., was as soloist of the village band. He was only four then, if you believe the story, and he thus was a musician before he could read and write. It might be mentioned that Phil's father was the band leader at Macy about 20 years ago.

Romance.

When Phil first came to New York it was as a graduate of Indiana University with a three-year Juilliard musical scholarship. One month away from his Indiana sweetheart, Catherine Stroufe, however, so affected him that he went home and married the girl. With a wife the scholarship was insufficient, and a job was indicated. Clerking at the Harmonie club interfered too much with his vocal training, and musical comedy seemed to offer both money and practice.

"Lady Do" gave him a chance largely on the strength of his good looks, and he won a place in the original cast of "Good News" as an immediate result. This introduced him to radio and the recent growth of broadcasting, especially chain programs originating here, soon made him give all his working time to the microphone.

As the youngest of 11 children, Phil was naturally the pet of the family and because of his early start it was thought he would go to a conservatory of music as quickly as possible. s enjoyment of the freshman year at the university was so great, though, that he postponed the conservatory until he had acquired a Phi Beta Kappa key for scholarship and the degrees of bachelor of arts and bachelor of music. During some of this time he taught a country school to help out with expenses. The rest of the money which put him through was earned singing in a church choir at Bloomington, the college town, and working in the school library. He found time to make the Aeons, honor society for student activity, too.

Books Come Second.

The love for books which the library work and college years fostered is now Phil's chief interest aside from his wife and work. In fact, one of the reasons he is glad for his success thus far is the opportunity it has given him to purchase a library that will soon be envied by collectors of much longer standing. Phil came here three years ago, and has been a radio star only about two.

A chance studio meeting with Jack Parker and Frank Luther shortly after he began to be regularly featured as a soloist started the idea of the "Men About Town" trio. It quickly blossomed, as everyone knows, or at least so the boys know from the fan letters which they all three receive. Phil tops the list, though, and receives more requests for his photograph than he could begin to answer.

BRUNSWICK TROPHY AWARD ANNOUNCED

Cup To Be Given for "Broadcast Achievement," Kelvinator Official States.

The Kelvinator Georgia Company is co-operating with the Brunswick Radio Corporation in the award of a yearly trophy to be known as the Brunswick cup, which is to be presented, according to the endowment, for "the broadcast achievement which has, by its conception, made an outstanding and vital contribution to the life of the American people," R. C. Daubs, a member of the firm, announced Saturday.

In commenting upon the creation of this award, Mr. Daubs said, "In spite of the fact that the public has long looked upon broadcasting as the newest and most active of the modern arts, there has been no award with which to crown its yearly achievements. A local broadcasting station, far from the great metropolitan area, may be presenting the nation's finest program.

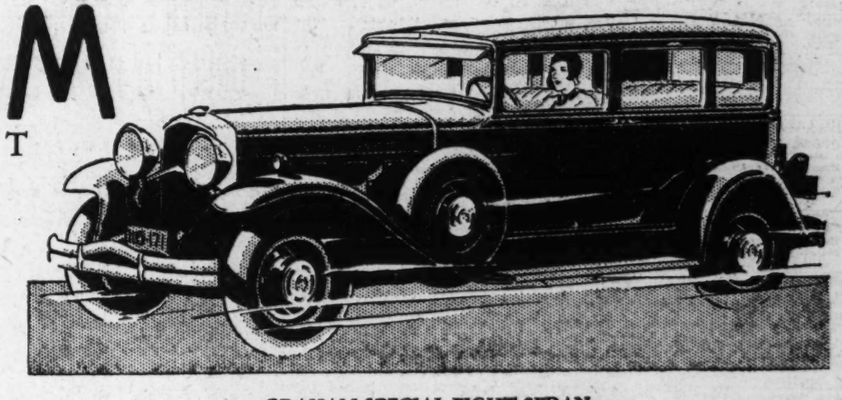

"Our planned creation of the Brunswick cup which will be awarded annually may, in part, correct this condition. At least, it is the hope of the vast Brunswick organization, that spans the entire world, that this may be accomplished.

"The endowment was made broad enough to enable the committee to make the award for an individual program, a group of programs, the accomplishments of a radio station itself, a commercial advertiser, a program recorder or even for an international broadcast."

"The Blue and the Grey," a melodrama of the Civil War, will be presented by Hank Simmons' Show Boat Saturday night, August 23, over WABC and stations.

Book Reviews in Tabloid

The Openers of the Gate. By L. Adams Beck, a popular writer who is also know as "E. Barrington." These stories of the orient, occult, and mysterious, collected in this book, "a mystic world is revealed where things happen in a way that our west could never know."

There are stories that give you the creeps, spasmodic spinal smothers, which wind up with a first-class case of horrors—for instance, this is the effect of "The Thug," "The Mystery of Iniquity," and then in a lighter vein there is the story of an English sportsman, whose experiences during the hunting season is sure to cause a few chills, or you may have passed that stage.

"The Openers of the Gate" will impress the reader with its unusual beauty, and as for "Waste Manor," a historical story full of mystery, the weirdness is so great that the hair will rise on the reader's head. These stories are told of the east and are founded on the highest range of Asiatic thought. The west will find an absorbing interest in the stories. (Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, New York.)

NEW FICTION RECEIVED.

The Unforeseen. By J. C. Snaith. Author of "The Undefeated." This is called "The gripping story of a man's sacrifice and a woman's faith." The author has been called a master story teller for several years and he does not lose any of his well earned force in the absorbing story which combines love and romance. The outline of the story is something like this: David Oxley, a popular young clubman, was attending a dance at his Aunt Georgiana's, a quarter to two, when he decided to leave, catch a little sleep, before going to play cricket for the club against Oxford, his old university. Upon entering his apartment he discovers the body of a murdered man. From this time on there is not a dull moment for, naturally, Oxley was supposed to be the guilty party, and why, is the romance. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

The Break of Day. This story of temptation is interesting from the first chapter to the last. No writer holds the attention of his reader like Basil King, author of "The Inner Shrine" and a number of other books which left a better after effect than the average novel.

He has woven this story around a mother to whom a great temptation came in a very weak moment. She had gone to the bank for the purpose of taking out another $1,000 bond to help meet the year's expenses. This she had done many times until the little fortune left her by her father was going she realized too rapidly. Upon entering the vault she discovers a bundle of bonds worth $50,000 and then the temptation came. This is the beginning of a very strange story in which both mystery and romance play an unusual part. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

The Shop Window Murders. By Vernon Loder, author of "Between 12 and 1." The men and women who started out early one Monday morning to their respective places of business as a usual thing stop to see the special window displays at Mander's great department store. It was unusually attractive on this certain Monday morning, for the windows were decorated as a fancy dress ball with the dancers on the floor.

This is the beginning of the author's thrilling story and it is conceded to be his best—it is made up of love, jealousy, hatred and envy—all of which leads to crime. (William Morrow & Co., New York.)

O Rare Content. The story of Herman Shaw Rylieny's adventures in living on the old New England farm. By Henry Wysham Lanier. Illustrated with woodcuts by James Reid. The author, who is well known to the literary world, its readers and writers, as clever and original in his contributions, has written a most entertaining story of life on an old New England farm. The following will perhaps explain the basis of the story:

"He broke down. In the midst of the daily rush of a successful business, club life, night life, hard living, he could not sleep; could not think; he could not eat; he could not digest. He went to his doctor, who told him first to get clearly into his head that it made no difference to anybody whether he lived or died, and then sent him for six months to live on a New England farm."

The story is interesting from the first page to the last, and the hero can be found in almost any store, office or club. It is the personal experience of a man who breaks down from overwork—an unknown disease in the days of our grandfathers—a most common disease in the America of today. Did you ever have it? If so, you should read Henry Lanier's latest story. (Sears Publishing Company. New York.)

The Shadow of Evil. By Charles J. Dutton. This mystery story is full of excitement and to thoroughly enjoy it the reader should wait until the leaves begin to fall and there is a cheerful light in the library, but that seems too long for the unwinding of a plot which will make the creeps run down the spine, even on a hot day!

This is the story: When letters continued to be sent to the chief of police of a well-known city warning him that a certain shadow was hanging over the city, the chief became worried. "The work of a crank," said Harley Manners, professor of abnormal psychology, and a friend of the chief. Shortly afterward a woman was found dead in the park. The best doctor said it was caused from a stroke. Sunday morning a prominent minister was found dead in his study—the doctor and the coroner said it was caused by a stroke, and there were others to follow. All this worried and puzzled the chief until it was found that they were victims of a poison that acted within five minutes. When and how was this rare poison administered to the victims? (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

The Other Half. A novel of America's biggest problem—the gangster—by one who knows and dares to tell. By Charles Francis Coe. The author is a modern writer, a student of crime, and a man who is fearless. The story is "stark drama, satiric humor, deep laid psychology." (Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, New York.)

Shepherds in Sackcloth. By Sheila Kaye-Smith. Author of "Green Apple Harvest." "Joanna Godden" and "The Village Doctor." The author being a native of Sussex writes most interestingly of this location. In this story she tells of the changing life of Sussex—it is a story with a modern setting by an author who spent most of her life in the land that was really a part of her life. She married the Reverend Theodore Penrose Fry, a rector in one of the Sussex parishes, so she continues to be called the "novelist of Sussex."

"This novel set in the corner of the world which the author has made her own, is the story of a little parish unified by the truly shepherd-like devotion of its rector." It is here the romance of a young girl and a village lad, and the death of the former, has a sad effect on the recor. It is an appealing story with the undercurrent for which the stories of the author is so well known. In writing of this story G. B. Stern says, "She does not have to invent plots for her stories, because life itself is her plot, and that has tang enough." (Harper and Brothers, New York.)

Lydia's Little Plans. By Elizabeth Hall Yates. The title of the story seems to bring a message of "love's young dream," and of the pleasures of youth. Evidently Lydia, the heroine of the story, was thinking of something interesting, for she stood "with her head cocked a little to one side and with her left forefinger laid upon her left cheek, in deepest thought." Lydia was quite a favorite with her friends and while they admired her little blonde head and her innocent appearance, in this instance they wanted very much to know what she was thinking about.

Alan shuddered when he saw the look in the blue eyes, and Irene wondered what terrible dose was being concocted—"what a spy Lydia would have made and what a joy she would have been—to the enemy." Lydia's way of working out her plans for those around her is the basis for a charming summer romance. (Penn Publishing Co., Philadelphia.)

PURCHASING BOARD WARNED BY MAYOR

Ragsdale Addresses Critical Letter to Councilmanic Committee.

Mayor I. N. Ragsdale Saturday repeated the warning he has made several times to members of the purchasing committee of council, in charge of purchase of many hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of city supplies annually, admonishing them in a communication to be "extremely vigilant in protecting the city's best interests."

The mayor addressed a letter to the committee, pointing out the grave responsibility which rests on it and asking that members be especially active in seeing that Atlanta buys at the very best prices the best materials.

No comment was made as to why the letter was written, but it is assumed that since several changes have been made on the committee within the past several weeks he wished to acquaint the new members as to their responsibility.

Councilman James T. Ozburn, of the seventh ward, former chairman, has resigned following his indictment on charges growing out of the probe of municipal graft, and Councilman Nelson T. Spratt, of the tenth ward, has been designated as chairman.

The committee at the present time has under consideration bids for furnishing tires to the city for the next quarter, having received the bids several days ago, and several other important purchases which are being tabulated.

Withers Cigar Co. To Larger Quarters

Refuting hard-time reports, the J. B. Withers Cigar Company, of Atlanta, on Saturday announced that they have been forced to seek larger quarters, solely because of the heavy increase in business they have rcently enjoyed.

A. I. Downer, assistant to the president and manager of sales, said that the popular brands of cigars they handle were showing a steady increase of sales and that this increase, instead of slowing during the past few months had shown a marked acceleration.

"We are moving from our old address at 144 Walton street," said Mr. Downer, "to larger quarters at 203 Marietta street. I don't believe all these hard times stories I hear, for the simple reason that we are selling more cigars today than ever before. Anyway, I know that men who like good cigars at a reasonable price have money to spend—because they are buying our goods."

C. J. Woodberry is president and general manager of the J. B. Withers Cigar Company, which is one of the best known firms in its line in this territory.

THE CONSTITUTION'S REAL ESTATE REVIEW

CONDUCTED IN THE INTEREST OF DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTA AND THE SOUTH

Five New Stores To Be Built On Peachtree Near Fourth St.

Chiles and Erwin of Adams-Cates Handling Project for Lewis Estate; $300,000 Involved.

A new step in the continued northbound development of Peachtree street was disclosed last week with announcement of plans to erect a commercial structure in the city's leading thoroughfare between Fourth and Fifth streets. The development, involving a total investment understood to be approximately $150,000, is expected to be undertaken shortly by the L. P. Lewis estate.

The project calls for a modern two-story building containing five store units with Peachtree frontage. The building is to be located on the east side of the street at what is known as 755-763 Peachtree street, N. E., and now occupied by one of the city's old prominent residences.

The development is regarded with significance in local real estate circles in showing the persistent trend for commercialization of the section along Peachtree street, well north of the central business area.

The structure will have a frontage of 100 feet on Peachtree and extend back 120 feet on the south end and 100 feet on the north end. According to the plans, actual construction is to be started by September 1, with the development to be ready for occupancy by January 1, 1931. Leases for tenants to occupy all of the stores have been negotiated through Adams-Cates Company, agents.

The development involves an additional $150,000 in the aggregate rentals of leases handled by John O. Chiles and T. C. Erwin, Jr., of the Adams-Cates Company.

Tenants who have contracted for space in the new structure include Porter & Porter, interior decorators, who will occupy the double store at 755-757 Peachtree; Mrs. Jack Brantley's studio at No. 759; Mrs. Inman Sanders' specialty shop at No. 761, and the decorating firm of Katherine Daley and Lida Nash at No. 763. Beauty parlors and dressmaking establishments have obtained space on the second floors.

Construction of the commercial development is seen to mark the unchecked growth of Atlanta's business area and the continued spread of stores in the vicinity generally referred to as the Peachtree-North avenue center. The Lewis project is regarded with additional significance in its tendency to fill in the breach between the North avenue and Tenth street commercial centers.

According to Edward S. Lewis, of Morgan, Dillon & Lewis, the plans of the L. P. Lewis estate stipulate a type of development that will fit in harmoniously with the surroundings and enhance property values in the section. The exterior of the proposed development will be ornamental and finished in attractive and substantial materials. Face brick and stone, combined with much glass areas and a trimming of iron grill work, will constitute this portion of the structure.

Study Future Needs In Subdivision Survey

With a view to avoidance of oversubdivision in American cities, and to gather accurate data of primary importance to the city and to the realtor subdivider, the home builders and subdividers division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards has passed a resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee to conduct research and investigation of the present and future needs for further subdivision in cities throughout the United States and Canada.

The division expects to make the survey through local real estate boards. These latter organizations will be asked to collect the following data from their cities for inclusion in the nation-wide survey:

(1) Figures on anticipated population growth. Such data, the division points out, now is being acquired constantly by the telephone industry to protect it in its plans for future extension and could be accumulated likewise by real estate boards.

(2) Measurements of the total area and a report on the total number of recorded subdivision lots which are not now being utilized, data to be presented for each section of the cities reporting.

(3) Statistics as to how many of these unutilized lots have street improvements in and are ready for use.

(4) Such other data as would aid in establishing a reasonable relation between city growth and supply of residential lots.

3 Die as Plane Explodes in Air

SHEBOYGAN, Wis., Aug. 23.—(AP) Three men were killed near here today when their plane exploded as it was doing a wing-over and crashed 1,000 feet to the ground.

The dead were Elmer Blumenberg, St. Cloud, Wis.; Gus Damrow, Sheboygan, a professional wrestler, and Marshall Field, formerly of Madison, the pilot. Wreckage from their plane was scattered for a mile around.

The ship had just taken off from the airport, according to witnesses, when flames were seen to shoot from the motor. The wings buckled and the ship went into a spin.

Searchers found Field's body in the cockpit. Damrow's was 100 feet away and Blumenberg's also had been tossed some distance.

Laura La Plante Finds Stolen Gems

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Jewels said to be valued at $8,000, recovered from three negroes arrested as they attempted to pawn them, have been identified by Laura La Plante, motion picture actress, as having been stolen from her April 20.

Chicago police were advised of the identification through photographs by Los Angeles authorities today. The negroes said they were employed by the Pullman Company and found the jewelry in a coach.

Miss La Plante, in private life wife of William Seiter, a director, will be asked to come here to prosecute larceny charges against the trio, who gave their names as Gladys Paine, 21; George Salter, 27, and Harry Rhodes, 28.

$257,000 Bond Properties Sold In Bankruptcy

Disposition of the $257,000 bonded apartments of Guaranteed Bond & Mortgage Company, bankrupt, has been cleared up in recent court action, it was learned Saturday from Receiver Clifford M. Walker.

The apartments, involving the major holdings of the defunct company, included the 48-unit structure at 1130 Piedmont avenue, and two adjoining apartments at 856 and 860 Briarcliff road, containing 24 units in one and 28 in the other.

All of the structures are two stories high, with orginal bond issues amounting to $67,000 on the Piedmont avenue apartment and $100,000 and $90,000 on the two Briarcliff road apartments.

Those acquiring the apartments on Briarcliff road were the Mortgage Guarantee Company, which had a first mortgage on the property, and the Chicago Trust Company, trustee for bonds on the apartment. The Piedmont avenue apartment was acquired, subject to first mortgage, by Frank Hawkins, who held the second mortgage.

In each case, nominal sums were paid by the purchasers who took over the properties and assumed liabilities.

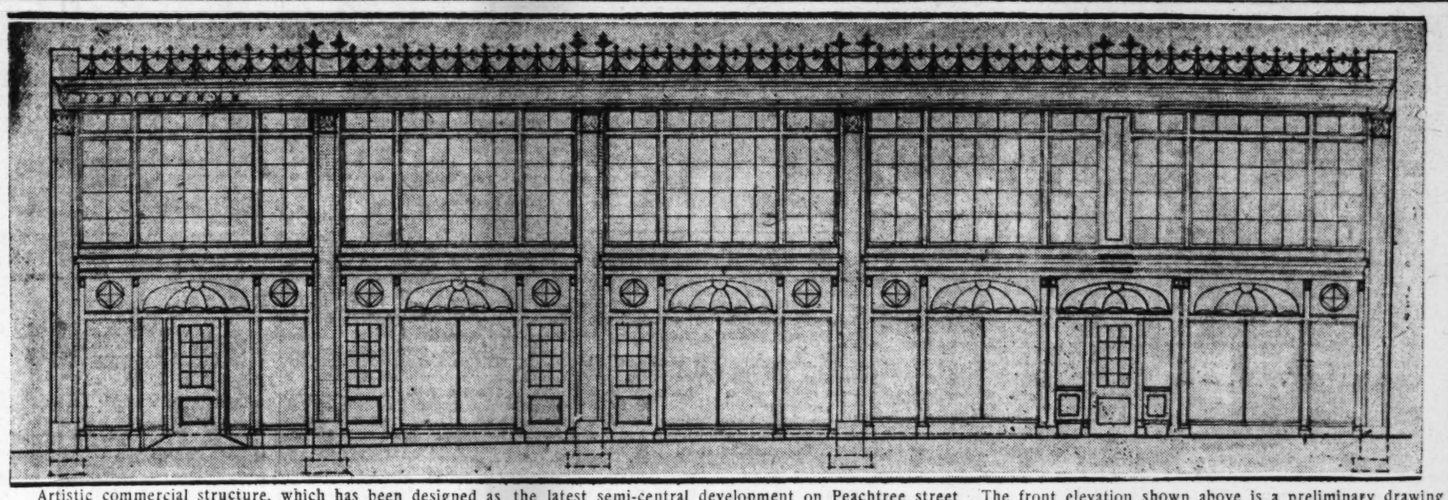

Beer Not Banned Under Rubio's Plan

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Beer lies outside the Mexican government's campaign against intoxicating liquors, President Ortiz Rubio today told a committee of brewers.

He said that so long as beer does not contain more than 5 per cent of alcohol this will continue to be the government's attitude.

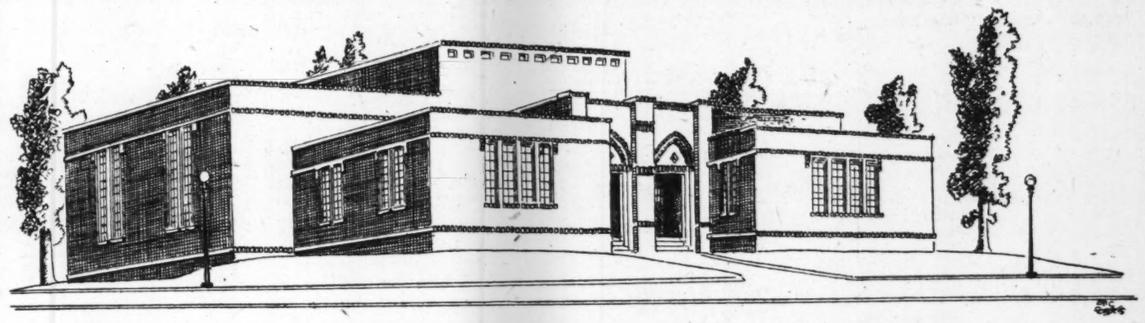

He reiterated his statement that the campaign is one of persuasion rather than one of prohibition.

Artistic Semi-Central Development Planned for Peachtree

Artistic commercial structure, which has been designed as the latest semi-central development on Peachtree street. The front elevation shown above is a preliminary drawing by Morgan, Dillon & Lewis, architects. The building, which will be two stories in height and contain a series of five-store units on the ground floor, is to be erected immediately by the L. P. Lewis estate on the site of the old Lewis residence, between Fourth and Fifth streets. All of the ground floor stores and most of the second story have been leased through John O. Giles and T. C. Erwin, Jr., of the Adams-Cates agency, handling the project.

Gymnasium Being Built at Clark University

New gymnasium being erected at Clark University, which marks the first unit of a $250,000 building program. The structure will contain a number of divisions for the athletic department of the institution, and will be completed by the first of the year, with portions available at earlier dates. The unit depicted above is to cost $40,000.

Constituting the initial link in a $250,000 building program, a $40,000 athletic gymnasium building has been put under construction on the campus of Clark University, prominent negro educational institution in south Atlanta.

In addition to the gymnasium unit, the program calls for erection of a large men's dormitory and modern apartments for the school faculty.

The nucleus of the gymnasium building will be the playing courts equipped with a seating capacity to accomodate 1,500 spectators. In addition to this the structure will contain a recreation room, locker room for 60 men, shower and lavatory equipment.

In the basement of the building will be a supply room to be used by managers of the various athletic teams.

Special athletic facilities for girls will be located in this portion, including lockers for 30, shower and other equipment. Drinking fountains will be placed in both the men and women sections.

Another portion of the structure will contain a school health center. This department will be used for physical examinations of all students. It will be modernly equipped for medical requirements and first aid emergencies. Attached to the department will be the office of the medical director and a waiting room. These will be on the first floor of the gymnasium building at the entrance.

A novel feature of the development will be a completely furnished publicity department with desks, typewriters and other requirements to be used by visiting writers and for school publicity releases.

Ground for the gymnasium building has already been broken. The structure is to be completed by the first of the year, with the locker rooms and showers made available in time for the opening of the fall school term. The building contract has been let to Aiken & Faulkner, while the architectural work was handled by the architects' bureau of the school.

The exterior of the building will be done in brick veneer, trimmed with stone. It will have a tar and gravel roof. The playing courts, built of hard maple flooring and measuring 50 by 100 feet, will be equipped with seats arranged as elevated bleachers.

The $250,000 building program marks the most recent step in the rapid growth of the institution under the administration of Dr. M. S. Davage, president. A campaign to complete the building fund for the entire program is scheduled to be launched the latter part of September.

Direct Speedy Clearing of City Hall Site

Action promising a speedy clearing of the old city hall site at Marietta and Forsyth streets was taken last week. Shown above is Mayor Ragsdale pointing to the new forces at work, with Paul S. Etheridge standing beside him. Mr. Etheridge, who is chairman of the public works committee of the Fulton county commission, came to the rescue with county labor facilities when long delay in clearing the site threatened.

U.S. Commission Plans Publication of Homes

Information on the various points to be considered in buying a home will be compiled and published for public use by a special committee of the national committee on wood utilization, according to a recent announcement by Robert P. Lamont, United States secretary of commerce.

The publication will discuss the planning, designing and construction of houses costing less than $15,000. Irving Hiett, Toledo, Ohio, past president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, has been named a member of the sub-committee sponsoring the publication.

BUILDING LOAN HEAD TO ASK TAX REDUCTION

R. Holtby Myers, of Los Angeles, new president of the United States Building and Loan League, will suggest immediate tax reductions as an encouragement to home-building when he is summoned to President Hoover's planning committee conference to be held shortly in Washington in connection with the Hoover program to stimulate the construction of more homes.

Mr. Myers, who was invited by the president to become a member of the planning committee, said he would offer a program for shifting some of the tax burden from real estate. He also stated, in an interview issued from the new national headquarters of the building and loan league, that he would recommend a curtailment of "unnecessary public improvements that add to the tax bills of the nation, most of which are passed on to the owner of real property."

Mr. Myers, who announced something of the work proposed for the league during the coming year, criticized the appointment of building material dealers and subdividers on the boards of local building and loan associations because, he said, this practice often resulted in a commitment to purchase the wares of such men which is not always the best thing for the home owner.

"Building and loan officials should remember that they stand alone in this field, in that they have nothing to sell to the home buyer," said the league president. "They should not ally themselves with anyone who has anything to sell, however honest and reputable such people may be. It is for the building and loan official to look over the market and advise the home builder in the purchase of home and home-building materials. If men in the building material or realty business sit on the building and loan association board, there is often a certain obligation on the part of the association to deal with these men. This sometimes is not for the best interests of the home builder, especially if there are in the town other dealers from whom perhaps better prices or terms may be obtained."

St. Petersburg Picked For Realtor Meeting

The National Association of Real Estate Boards has accepted the invitation of the St. Petersburg, Florida, Realty Board to hold its next annual mid-winter meeting in St. Petersburg. January 15, 16 and 17 are the dates set for the sessions in the "Sunshine City." At this meeting all association officers for 1931 will be inducted into office and 1931 policies and programs for the association and its divisions will be outlined. The Vinoy Park hotel will be realtor headquarters during the meetings. The meeting of the board of directors will take place on January 15.

Doyle E. Carlton, governor of Florida, Louis E. Hall, president of the Florida Association of Real Estate Boards, Paul O Meredith, executive secretary of the Florida Association of Real Estate Boards, and local boards througout the state joined with the St. Petersburg realtors in extending hospitality to the national Association and urging that St. Petersburg be chosen as the city for the mid-winter meeting.

TO STUDY OBSTACLES OF HOME OWNERSHIP

Realtor Head Placed on Hoover's Commission.

Leonard P. Reaume, Detroit, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, at the invitation of President Hoover, will represent the country's realtors on the commission which the president has just appointed to investigate the problems presented in home building and ownership with a view to "removal of influences which seriously limit the spread of home ownership, both in town and country."

The commission, to be known as the White House conference on home building and home ownership, is composed of the heads of some 19 national business, professional, trade and civic organizations, headed by Secretary of Commerce Robert P. Lamont. John M. Gries, chief of the division of building and housing in the commerce department, is to act as executive secretary to the new commission. The project is to be financed from private sources, funds already having been provided.

President Hoover's plan is to have the conference set up nation-wide subcommittees to study different phases of the present problems of home ownership. "The conference will deal with the whole broad question of home construction and home ownership," the president said in announcing the establishment of the commission. "One of the important questions is finance. In order to enable the purchase of homes on what amounts to the installment plan it is necessary to place first and, often enough, second mortgages.

"First mortgages, carried so largely by the savings banks and insurance companies, have been affected by competition with bonds and other forms of investment. Second mortgages, which are also necessary to many people, have, if we take into account commissions, discounts and other charges, risen in rates in many cities to the equivalent of 20 or 25 per cent per annum, all of which not only stifles home ownership, but has added to the present depression by increasing unemployment in the trades involved.

"The finance question, however, is only one of many. Greater comfort and reduction in cost of construction in many parts of the country through improved design, the better layout of residential areas, are all of first importance. It is not suggested that the results of the investigation will be made recommendations for legislation, but, rather, a co-ordination, stimulation and larger organization of the private agencies. There, however, needs to be a study of the mortgage laws of many states with a view to more iptelligent attitude toward the home builder."

A[illegible]oma of Beer B[illegible]gs Seizure Of Two Stills

The odor of steaming hot beer, wafted on a gentle northeast breeze last Tuesday to the highway on which federal prohibition agents, operating in Paulding county, were traveling, led them to two 500-gallon copper stills, one full and the other half cull of corn in a state of fermentation.

J. O. Pace, who lives four miles from Dallas, posted a bond of $1,000 in the court of United States Commissioner E. S. Griffith Saturday to appear in United States court and answer to a charge of manufacturing liquor. He had no statement to make about the stills.

Both stills were operated underground, the steaming beer being moved from the boilers through a 150-yard pipe line to a condenser resting on top of a small spring and protected from view by a canopy made of pine bushes. Twenty-nine gallons of whisky, found close by, were confiscated.

Memorial Committee Selection Delayed

Selection of a committee of prominent citizens and members of council to negotiate in an effort to revive work of carving the Stone Mountain Memorial to the Confederacy will await further conferences between Councilman Wiley L. Moore and James L. Key, who will begin a four-year term as Atlanta's mayor January 1, it was announced Saturday by Mayor I. N. Ragsdale.

The mayor pointed out that affairs of the association do not as yet make action by him imperative and indicated that he would be in no haste to select the committee, which council authorized him to appoint several weeks ago.

Moore, who was author of the paper, has championed a plan to have Atlanta take over affairs of the association and to complete the carving, and the committee was to function with that end in view.

BY JOHN P. BOUGHAN.
Associated Press Market Editor.

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Huge enlargement of estimates of the amount of wheat used as live stock feed instead of bread material led to lively upturns in grain values today. According to figures suggested today from responsible sources, the substitution of wheat for corn this season is likely to total 150,000,000 bushels, whereas the highest estimate heretofore has been 125,000,000 bushels and the generally accepted allowance was about an even 100,000,000 bushels. Corn crop advices today continued to emphasize the unusual number of fields with corn only 3 to 4 feet tall, and the accumulating evidence that barren stalks and unfilled ears are much more the rule than has generally been believed.

Closing quotations on wheat were nervous 1 1-8 to 1 5-8 cents higher than yesterday's finish. Corn closed unsettled 5-8 to 1 1-4 cents up, oats 1-8 to 3-4 cents advanced, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 15 cents.

Substitution of as much as 150,000,000 bushels of wheat for corn would be by far the biggest switching of one grain for another ever known, trade authorities said today. The figures pointing to such a gigantic transfer came from the principal partner of one of the leading commission houses here, and were based on preliminary returns, gathered under the direction of a former department of agriculture expert. Statements which accompanied the preliminary figures said that if complete reports be expected within a few days prove to be of the same character as those already in hand, recent forecasts that 100,000,000 bushels of wheat will be fed would have to be greatly altered, and that 150,000,000 bushels as the aggregate will not be far from actual.

Not until near the end of the day did either wheat or corn show much tendency to react from price advances, although numerous standing orders to sell on upturns came into operation at various stages. In the final dealings, however, profit-taking broadened out, and something of a setback from the day's top level was witnessed. At the closing, nevertheless, the wheat market did an unusual thing, closing at virtually the day's highest point, and doing so in the face of a statement from a British authority that there is a possibility of Russia exporting 40,000,000 bushels of wheat this season and the Balkans 48,000,000 bushels.

Notable scantiness of stocks of corn in Chicago facilitated the upward swing both of the corn market and of wheat as well. Oats advanced with other cereals.

Provisions averaged higher owing to grain strength, despite downturns in the value of hogs.

ATLANTA SPOT COTTON.

Atlanta spot cotton closed steady, 10 points up to 10.75.

Receipts, 77; shipments, 117; stocks, 43,503.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Reports of rains in the southwest and larger ginning figures than expected caused some selling in cotton here during today's early trading. The offerings were absorbed by covering, however, and after selling off to 11.00 the new December contract rallied to 11.27, with the advance accompanied by reiterated reports that farmers were holding. Part of this gain was lost under realizing on the late trading, with December closing at 11.11, while the general market closed steady at net advance of 1 to 7 points.

The opening was steady at an advance of 1 point to a decline of 4 points. There was some buying on the relatively firm showing of Liverpool, but this was supplied by selling on private reports of light to moderate rains in northern, central and western Texas. Offerings increased after the publication of the census report showing 572,666 bales ginned prior to August 16, compared with 304,771 last year. The trade had been expecting a report of under 500,000 bales, and the actual figures, which were the highest on record for the period except the returns of 1925, brought in considerable selling.

October contracts sold off to 10.85 and March to 11.27, making net declines of about 6 to 9 points on the active positions, but it looked as if some of the recent heavier sellers were taking advantage of this decline to cover short contracts for over the week-end. Whatever its source the demand was sufficient to cause a sharp rally which was accompanied by expressions of uncertainty regarding the adequacy of benefits of the Texas rains and reiterated reports that farmers were marketing slowly. The new October sold up to 11.12 and March to 11.58, making net advances of about 11 to 24 points on the general list. The demand then tapered off and there were reactions under realizing.

Some traders felt that the heavy ginnings reflected the hastening of maturity by high temperatures, while others regarded them as strengthening expectations of a very heavy movement and a probability that the futures markets would be called upon to absorb a relatively large volume of hedging within the next few weeks.

Liverpool cables said there had been covering and trade calling in that market and reported an improved demand for cotton cloths and yarns in Manchester.

SPOTS IRREGULAR AT NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Trading was quite active in the cotton market for a short Saturday session and prices were erratic and irregular. Despite better Liverpool cables than due the market here opened 1 to 5 points down and soon showed losses compared with the previous close of 3 to 5 points.

When the census bureau at the opening of the second hour reported total ginnings prior to August 16 as larger than looked for, the market sold down to levels 9 to 10 points below the previous close, but after a brief period, the market advanced 27 to 28 points on covering for over the week-end, but eased off 15 to 16 points near the end on liquidation and realizing. The close was steady net 3 points up to 1 down.

Liverpool came in 3 to 5 points better than due, but first trades here showed losses of 1 to 5 points and prices eased off to declines of 3 to 5 points on hedge selling and on the map showing of Texas rains.

After the ginnings report was issued prices eased off under liquidation by recent buyers, October dropping to 10.88 and December to 11.01, down 9 to 10 points, but shorts covering for over the week-end ran prices up sharply to new highs at 11.12 for October and 11.28 for December, up 27 to 28 points from the lows.

Prices eased off 15 to 16 points at the end on week-end liquidation, October closing at 10.96 and December at 11.13 or 2 to 3 points net higher on these active months.

PAST WEEK SEES UNSETTLED FRUIT, VEGETABLE MARKETS

PEACH PRICES RISE FURTHER

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE. (Bureau of Agricultural Economics).

Improved conditions are expected in the drouth-stricken areas as a result of recent rains and low temperatures. Fruit and vegetable markets were rather unsettled the past week. Potatoes continued to show a firm tone in eastern cities but the Chicago market was much lower. A downward price trend was recorded for cantaloupes, watermelons, tomatoes and sweet potatoes. Price advances occurred for peaches and western lettuce. Onion markets were fairly firm. Total shipments of 33 products decreased slightly to 19,390 cars. Sharp reduction was noticed in the movement of watermelons, but material increases for grapes, pears and potatoes.

Northern California apple shipments had decreased to 135 cars for the week. Washington increased to 60 cars, and the shipping season opened in New Mexico. New York, Michigan, Arkansas and New Jersey were making liberal forwardings in the east. Total movement of apples was 535 cars.

Grape shipments had increased to 950 cars, of which central California furnished 835. Arkansas and Missouri were quite active. Lug boxes and 4-basket crates of Thompson Seedless grapes were lower at California shipping points at 60-80c, with Malagas returning 75-90c, the middle of the week. Suit case boxes of fresh Italian prunes returned 40c in the Yakima Valley of Washington. That state and California were chief sources of plums and prunes.

Telephone peas were in strong demand at Colorado points. The 45-pound crates advanced to an f. o. b. range of $3.00-3.50. Colorado shipped 80 and New York about 20 cars of peas. Extra fancy Bartlett pears sold at Medford, Ore., at $1.30-1.50 per box, while Washington loading stations reported a range of $1.20-$1.25. Pear shipments increased to 2,000 cars, some going to canneries.

Heavier Potato Movement.

Drouth was relieved by light rains in several districts last week and possibly the worst of the prolonged dry weather is past. Potato shipments increased greatly to 3,570 cars, largely because of heavier movement in Minnesota and other northern states from Maine to Washington. Minnesota was second only to New Jersey, these two states shipping respectively 435 and 1,325 cars. Movement from Virginia, Maryland, Kansas and Missouri was down to a low total of 530 cars. Wisconsin, Idaho, Washington and California shipped 180 each and Long Island 210 cars. Last report of f. o. b. market had advanced sharply to a top of $1.85 and then declined to $1.50-1.55. Early Ohios in the southeastern part of Minnesota were lower at $1.30-1.35, and the market there was dull. New Jersey Cobblers were firm in city consuming centers at $1.50@2.10 per 100 pounds; Long Island stock advanced in New York city to $1.65-1.85, and Eastern Shore barrels brought $3.00. Prices in the Chicago carlot market were down. Midwestern Cobblers had reached a top of $2.15 in Chicago and then dropped to $1.60-1.75 per 100 pounds. Minnesota Early Ohios ruled lower at $1.45-1.55; Wisconsin Cobblers brought $1.75 and Nebraska stock $1.75-1.90. Idaho Burals had declined to a level of $2.10.

Peaches Advance Further.

Because of heavy shipments of California peaches to canneries, the total movement of this fruit last week remained around 3,240 cars but was nearly one-third lighter than a year ago. Market supplies were limited. California had increased to 3,180 cars, compared with 1,470 a year ago. Southeastern states were finished; Pennsylvania began. City values of best Elbertas from several producing areas were generally higher at $2-4 per bushel basket, or 6-basket crate. North Carolina Belles sold at $2.75-3.25, and the 6-basket crates of New Jersey Hileys ruled $2-2.25 in New York city. Boxes of California Elbertas sold mostly at 80c-$1.15.

Cantaloupes Decline.

Cantaloup markets showed some weakness. The situation was dull in the Turlock district of California, and standard crates declined to $1, even though California shipments decreased to 185 cars. Jumbo Honeydews brought only 50-60c around Turlock. On the eastern shore peninsula of Maryland and Delaware, the returns were mostly $1.75-3, depending on the size of the crate, and flat crates brought 75-90c. City dealers were getting only $1-2 for the larger crates from eastern shore, with flats at 50c-$1.25. Flat crates of New Mexico pink meats sold in consuming centers at 75-$1, and Colorado saimon tints at 75c-$1.25. Standard crates from Arkansas brought $1.50 in Chicago, while California Honeydews sold lower at $1-2 per standard crates, but Honeyballs were firm at $2.25-3.25.

Cantaloupe shipments increased to 850 cars, mainly a result of Colorado increasing to 363. Michigan season opened. Eastern shore points originated only 110 cars. Texas, New Mexico and Washington were active. Condition of the cantaloupe crop in 13 states at the opening of August was only 74 per cent of normal, or 7 points lower than the month before and 8 points lower than a year ago. Highest condition—around 90 per cent of normal—was reported in Colorado, New Mexico and New Jersey.

Fewer Melons Moving.

Watermelons were lower at shipping points, but fairly firm in terminal markets. The supply was fast decreasing and last week totaled only 2,225 cars from all shipping states. Georgia was down to less than 1,000; the Carolinas shipped only 330 and Texas 240 cars. Missouri was credited with 160. Maryland and Virginia were increasing. Medium-sized Dixie Belles brought only $25 to $100 per carload at the closing report from central Georgia, and Thurmond Grays returned $65 to $100. Large Tom Watsons in Texas were selling on a cash-track basis at 30c to 50c per 100 pounds. Carlot sales in city markets ranged anywhere from $135 to $350 and sales on a unit basis were at 25c to 60c. Washington quoted 100 eastern melons at $12.50 to $35. General condition of the melon crop had declined to 64 per cent of normal by August and was considerably lower than a year ago. The Missouri crop registered only 50 per cent of normal.

Potatoes Selling Lower.

Sweet potato movement increased to 285 cars, of which Virginia originated 120 and North Carolina and Louisiana about 50 each. Virginia and Carolina barrels had declined to $6 to $7.50 in city markets. Bushel packages from several states ranged generally $2.15 to $3, but Alabama Triumphs sold at $1.50 to $2.50.

Lettuce Prices Advance.

F. o. b. markets for good lettuce were stronger and the demand was exceeding the supply of good stock. Colorado lettuce of generally good quality returned $2 to $2.25 per crate at four to five dozen heads at shipping points. Central California reported much fair to ordinary stock, but best sold at $2.15 to $2.40 cash-track. City sales of California stock were higher at $3 to $4.50 per crate, with Washington stock at $3 to $4, and Colorado receipts showing a wide jobbing range of $1 to $3. New York Big Boston was weak at 25c to 90c per crate of 2 dozen heads. Shipments of lettuce held around 845 cars for the week. Colorado had increased to 105, but New York decreased greatly to 190 cars. California originated 490 and Washington 60 cars. Movement of mixed vegetables of Colorado was very active, totaling 300 cars last week. A wide variety of vegetables is moving from that state. Condition of the lettuce crop in five states averaged 77 per cent.

Most onion markets showed a firm to slightly higher tone, chiefly due to recent limited shipments. Output increased last week to 470 cars, but was not yet up to the corresponding record for 1929. Massachusetts forwarded 135 cars. California increased to 95, while Washington decreased to 50 cars. Iowa shipped about 60 cars and New York increased to 50. The season began in Ohio. The crop in northern Texas is not amounting to much.

Texas Prize Takers, partly graded, brought $2.25-2.50 per 100-pound bag in Atlanta. Demand was good at shipping points in Connecticut valley of Massachusetts, and f. o. b. prices of best stock there advanced to $1.55-1.60 per bag of 100 pounds, or 80-85c per 50-pound sack. Terminal values of Massachusetts onions had strengthened to $1.60-2.25 for the larger sacks and to 90c-1.15 for smaller bags. The 100-pound containers of Orange county, New York, Yellows ruled $1.65-2.00, in city markets, with Wisconsin stock at $1.65-2.50 and Washington Yellows at $1.75-2.60. Arrivals from Iowa ruled $1.75-2.50 per 100-pound bag, or 90c-$1.10 per 50-pound sack. The 50-pound containers of white onions from California had declined slightly to $1.15-1.85. Indiana stock jobbers at $1.25-1.50.

August 1 condition of the onion crop in 17 states was about as usual, or 79 per cent. The recent production forecast showed Indiana and New York leading with more than 3,000,000 bushels each. Michigan expects a good crop of some 2,445,000 bushels but Colorado may have a reduction of one-fifth from its heavy crop of last year. The total late crop is estimated at more than 19,000,000 bushels.

More Cabbage This Year.

Production of cabbage in 14 intermediate states is forecast at 165,800 tons or only about 2 per cent more than last year. Heat and drouth cut production considerably below original expectations. The crop of domestic-type cabbage in 10 late states is expected to total 289,350 tons, compared with 252,600 last season. New York looks for nearly 99,000 tons, while Wisconsin may be greatly increased to 81,000 and Michigan to 25,000 tons. Colorado likewise shows a large increase. Much of this domestic cabbage is used for kraut manufacture. Plantings of Danish-type cabbage in eight late states are estimated at 36,970 acres or 9 per cent more than last season. All the important states show gains. New York reported about 21,000 and Wisconsin 9,240 acres. Condition of the Danish crop in August was slightly lower than a year ago and 5 points below the average August condition for the preceding 10 years. Recent shipments were principally from points in New York, Wisconsin, Iowa and Colorado. Last week's total was 465 cars. Northern Colorado reported a firm f. o. b. market at $1.00 per 100 pounds, with demand active.

Hudson Motor Dividend Cut Influences Stock Market Sentiment in Past Week—Colonel Current Collier's Diagnoses Ayres, Cleveland Banker, in Business Depression and Makes Forecast.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—At times this week the stock market was again under control by interests working for higher prices. There was basis for improvement in sentiment this week. But, evidently from the action of the stock market the average trader is still in a frame of mind where the business situation is expected to go from bad to worse.

Those working for higher stock market prices are going ahead on the belief that pessimism regarding general trade has been carried too far; that the stock market is heavily oversold; that the technical position of the stock market is strong; that whatever may be said about the results industrially of the remaining months of this year, at least seasonal improvement is ahead.

Stock market sentiment was influenced largely this week by such news as the cut in the Hudson Motor dividend and the passing of dividends by Shell Union Oil and other companies, the poor July earnings reported by the railroads. Those working for higher stock market prices are pointing out that the foregoing and other unfavorable news reflects water that has gone over the dam; that signs point to improvement in general trade rather than continued depression.

Steel scrap prices advanced this week, the second rise in less than a fortnight. The tone of the weekly reviews of the steel trade were more encouraging than at any time since trade depression became pronounced. Operations of steel mills were reported at 53 per cent of capacity against 52 per cent a week ago. This is the first weekly increase reported since the middle of April when the mills were running at 80 per cent of capacity. An increase of 1.6 per cent in building operations in 598 leading cities and towns was reported for July compared with June against a decline of 13 per cent in normal times between these two months. Information given out at Washington showed plainly that crop damage has been exaggerated. The average price of bonds daily made a new 1930 high.

Signs Not Conclusive.

Those working for higher stock market prices admit that the foregoing signs are only small straws; but in such quarters confidence is felt that more definite signs will soon appear. For example it was learned at the close of this week from trustworthy sources that high executive officials of the steel corporation are now more optimistic than at the close of July when, at the quarterly meeting of directors, the finance committee made up of such men as George F. Baker, J. P. Morgan, Thomas W. Lamont, went on record with the statement that August would be better than July, September better than August, with improvement continuing. From what was learned today high executive officials of the steel corporation are now confident that by the middle of October operations will be back to 80 per cent of capacity.

No one can be found today in conservative Wall Street quarters, even where optimism runs highest, who believes there is going to be anything more than slow improvement for the remainder of this year. Expectations of slow improvement are based on knowledge of our own domestic situation. Informed Wall Street agrees with the viewpoint of Colonel Ayers of the Cleveland Trust Company. Advance copy by this authority soon to appear in Collier's points out that when everybody is riding high and confidence and prosperity is widespread, it is then that the first seeds of depression are sown; that it is then that everybody produces as much as he can of everything, and as fast as he can, "in order to get as much of the prosperity as possible while the getting is good;" that "one of the things he gets is a surplus and the next a pain like the one of the greedy little boy who tries to eat too much. He has business indigestion;" that the next stage is depression slowly gathering ground; that then comes general universal recognition of depression with dismay; that then comes the emotion of fear causing the picture to look darker than it really is; that the "blue chorus" then gets into action; that this is the last phase of the depression.

Makes Diagnosis.

What happens next is told as follows:

"You see how the medicine is at work. Factories and merchants have been getting rid of their surpluses and families have been getting rid of their debts. Meanwhile we have not been producing on as large a scale. We are manufacturing shortages. In good times we manufacture surpluses and it is surpluses that bring on depression. In slow times we manufacture shortages and it is shortages that cure depressions and bring good times. In the first five months of this year we produced only about the same as we did in the first five months of 1925—five years ago. Yet in those five years the population has increased by seven millions and it is certain that national consumption is greater in 1930 than it was in 1925. Our living standards have advanced definitely in the last five years. We have been consuming more in the aggregate and more per capita and there are constantly more of us.

"With production lowered to the rate of five years ago and consumption higher, it will be seen that we cannot have much farther to go to produce the shortage that will send us all back to work again. All of the history of business indicates that the end of this depression is approaching. When a plant pushes up its first new shoots above the ground it does not mean that at that instant the engine started. The engine had to run and the plane had to taxi before it began to rise. We have been taxing for a good while. We are about ready to rise."

Ayers points out that there are two kinds of depression, the domestic, home-grown brand, produced by a collection of local causes and the international kind, the depression that spreads itself out over most of the advanced countries of the world because of world-wide conditions; that the type last named is the kind now being experienced; that it lasts longer than the one first named.

Informed Wall Street men believe that improvement is ahead for this country based on existing domestic conditions but that improvement will be slow because of world-wide conditions; that the hard task ahead for this country is the rebuilding of our foreign trade markets.

Cotton Ginning Heavily Eclipses 1929 Turnout

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Cotton ginned prior to August 16 from the growth of 1930 was announced today by the census bureau as having totaled 572,666 running bales, including 12,173 round bales, counted as half bales, and excluding linters.

To that date last year 304,771 bales, including 4,169 round bales, were ginned and in 1928 ginnings to that date were 279,568 bales, including 5,893 round bales.

The ginnings to August 16 include 77,956 bales of the crop of 1930 ginned prior to August 1 and counted in the supply for the season of 1929-30, compared with 86,974 and 88,761 bales of the crops of 1929 and 1928.

Ginnings by states were: Alabama, 20,992; Florida, 5,479; Georgia, 53,758; Louisiana, 20,348; Mississippi, 5,163; Texas, 466,046; all other states, 900.

SOME OPTIMISM FELT OVER STEEL OUTLOOK

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(AP)—In some quarters there was a tendency to view the steel situation with optimism this week while in others interests could see no change in general conditions. The theory was expressed that with the end of the summer larger steel tonnages would be required by many industries and that steel mill production would gain. Apparently one of the discouraging features continued to be the unsettlement in the automobile industry where further curtailment of operations was said to be planned. Pig iron was unchanged.

The copper market remained quiet. Domestic consumers have generally held off, although it was reported that they would be interested in metal at concessions. Large producers, however, are quoting electrolytic at 11 cents delivered in the Connecticut valley, with the possibility that small quantities might be obtained from customs smelters at slight concessions. Foreign buying has been limited to moderate quantities.

The tin market was dull with prices showing only fractional changes during the week. Sellers, however, showed no disposition to attract business by offering at important concessions.

The business situation in lead was the same as in many of the other metals, with the consuming interest very quiet. However, the tone was steady. Zinc was somewhat firmer earlier in the week, but later eased a trifle as the demand subsided.

Antimony was steadier. There were reported fair bids in the market for August-September shipment. Business was restricted to some extent by the light offerings.

Former New York Dancer Without Home or Country

VANCOUVER, B. C., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Naomi Winter, pretty Japanese-Canadian, and former New York night club dancer, had the new liner, Empress of Japan, all to herself today in her status of a girl without a country, while Canadian emigration officials wrestled with the problem of her presence here.

Born in Montreal, the girl married an American, whom she is divorcing, but from whom she has not yet received her final decree.

Canadian officials said they could not admit her because she is of Japanese extraction and subject to quota laws, her Canadian citizenship having been annulled by her marriage with an American. The United States cannot admit her, because she is of Japanese parentage and is no longer the wife of an American citizen.

The dancer says even Japan won't own her, because she is not by birth a citizen of that country.

The girl sailed from California last June for Japan and returned to the western hemisphere as one of the 540 passengers on the record-breaking trip of the new liner.

Two Die in Gotham As Rains Sweep City

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(AP)—A violent rainstorm accompanied by wind, thunder and lightning bombarded New York city today, uprooting trees and telephone poles and flooding streets and cellars.

Two persons were killed in automobile crashes attributed indirectly to the storm.

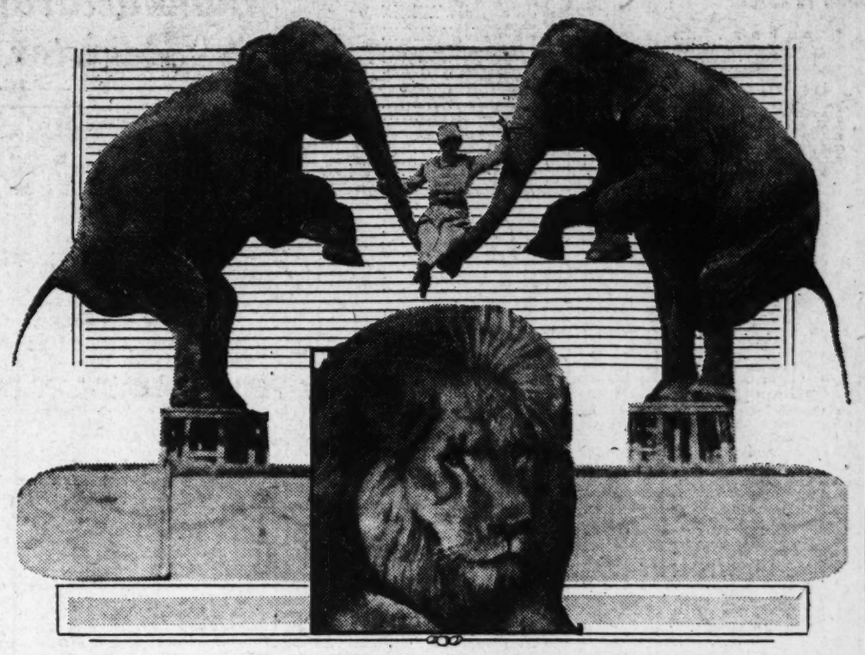

More than 500 basements of homes in the Brighton Beach section of Brooklyn were submerged. Streets in Coney Island were covered with a foot of water, and the boardwalk was inundated by heavy sea tides.

A northeast gale lashed the New Jersey coast and small craft navigated in the harbor with difficulty. Water poured into several subway stations. The weather bureau estimated that more than two and a half inches of rain had fallen since last night, and predicted cool and cloudy weather for the week-end.

Farmer, 61, Feels First Barber's Trim

COLUMBUS, Miss., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Entering a barber shop here today, Monroe Watson, 60-year-old farmer, said, "I'm going to do something I have never done before, get a hair cut in a barber shop." Watson said he had a hair cut at the request of his wife, who urged him to pay his first visit to a barber before he died.

Sparks Circus Will Arrive in Atlanta For Showing Monday Afternoon, Night

Sparks Circus arrives today, and its unloading will no doubt be watched by the usual enthusiastic crowd of boys of all ages from seven to seventy. Afternoon and night performances will be given Monday, the matinee starting at 2 and the night show at 8, with doors opening one hour earlier.

The long trains of Sparks' circus are due to arrive in the early morning hours from Chattanooga and will no doubt be greeted by an eager crowd of "boys," some of whom will have reached three score and ten, for circus day has a rejuvenating influence, under the magic spell of which Father Time turns back the hands of the clock. And so these boys of all ages will await with eager anticipation the first glimpse of the "flats," the stock cars, and the sleepers, which bring with them the people and the equipment of the white city of tents, which will rise with almost incredible swiftness on the grounds in the rear of Sears, Roebuck & Company's plant.

The afternoon performance will begin at 2, and the night show at 8 Monday, with doors opening one hour earlier to allow ample time for the inspection of the menagerie, which this season is the most comprehensive in the history of the show, and one of the largest now to be seen with any tented organization. Sparks' circus has the largest collection of trained wild animals now being exhibited.

The program is made up of featured acts of the first magnitude, including the original Nelson family, the Guise troupe of riders, starring Flora Bedini; the Rink Wright Duo of equilibrists, the Aerial Walters, and many others presented by the world's greatest artists in their line.

Tickets, both general admission and reserved, will be on sale tomorrow at Cable Piano Company, 84 Broad street, N. W., at the same price as at the grounds.

Crew of Fishing Schooner Escape 'Davy Jones Locker'

:: BOAT BEATEN TO PIECES BENEATH FEET OF CREW ::

LEWES, Del., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Blown to sea on the wings of a 50-mile gale in one of the worst storms the Delaware bay has seen in years, 40 men of the crew of the Consolidated Fishing Companies motorship Emily A. Foote stepped ashore here today after a dramatic and thrilling adventure at sea.

Their 100-foot Deisel powered craft pounded to pieces beneath their feet and themselves blown to sea in two small boats, the exhausted crew found harbor early today only after their life boats had crashed against the stone wall of the outed breakwater.

Helping each other up the slippery sea-washed walls, the little band walked three miles across the top of the wall to the harbor refuge light, where they laid in huddled heaps until daybreak.

The steamer was returning to Lewes, its home port, from a fishing expedition up the Delaware bay and met the advance of a northeastern gale shortly before 10 p. m. last night. Its loss is estimated at $100,000.

Captain John M. George, of Palmer, Va., realizing it was impossible to make shore in the face of the terrific storm and heavy seas, ordered the anchor thrown over when they neared the breakwater. Tossing about on the waves with its anchor dragging, the vessel went adrift toward the outer breakwater. Hardly had the order to man the two life boats been given when the vessel lost section after section of its deck, to be pounded to pieces by the waves.

Megaphone in hand, Captain George directed the course of the two boats from a perilous position in his own. The men tugged frantically at the oars in order to keep in view of each other.

Mile by mile, each of them certain they were being blown to their deaths, the small boats headed toward the open sea. Fog, by this time, had settled down almost to the fringe of the whitecaps and against the pounding waves voices were all but lost.

As the boats neared each other for brief periods Captain George repeated his shouts through the megaphone to keep within view of the harbor refuge light, which now and then sent a hopeful beam through the fog. Bodies exhausted and nerves nearly defeated, one after the other the men would slump down against their oars.

Only at intervals could the light be seen and for more than four hours it stood as the only guidance. About 2 a. m. the boat commanded by Captain George tossed and crashed against the stone wall of the outer breakwater, while the other floundered about, half mile away, helpless to steer their course in any direction.

Hand by hand, the 20 men in the first boat drew each other to the top and safety. The wall is about 10 feet above the highwater mark.

The other boat went through the same dangerous procedure until all had lifted themselves out of the sea.

Milk Truckmen Lashed by Mob

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 23.—(AP)—Violence flared again today in Kansas City's milk strike, climaxing in the beating of four employes of a pasteurization plant by a masked mob and destruction of a milk shed by dynamite.

Near Harrisonville, Mo., a mob of 100 men and boys halted a truck bringing milk to Kansas City for the Campbell Dairy Company. The truck was wrecked, the milk dumped, and four company employes attacked.

Harry Duncan, former Kansas City patrolman, employed as a guard, was kidnaped and beaten severely. He was released after several hours.

Elmer Taff, milk inspector, who was driving behind the truck, was hit on the head with a revolver butt. Albert Edwards, 31, of Harrisonville, the truck driver, and W. J. Ewing, dairy products salesman, also were treated roughly.

FORT LEAVENWORTH, Kan., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Lieutenant Henry J. Stahl, of Kansas City, air corps reserve, was killed and Private Murrell Travis, of Fort Leavenworth, was injured dangerously when their airplane crashed at the aviation field here today. Travis was unable to give the cause of the accident.

Florida Publisher Wins Release on Bond

MIAMI, Fla., Aug. 23.—(AP)—J. H. Wendler, publisher of two local weekly papers, was at liberty under $1,000 bond today pending appeal of sentence passed on him yesterday on a two-year-old conviction of criminal libel.

Wendler was sentenced by Criminal Court Judge W. F. Brown to serve three months at hard labor on the county chain gang as the jurist invoked a sentence suspended at the time of Wendler's conviction, subject to good behavior. The action was taken on complaint that the publisher recently had allegedly violated the good behavior parole with disrespectful reference in one of his papers to the late Glenn H. Curtiss.

Capital Squirrels Get $100 Bequest

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The squirrels that frequent the public parks of Washington can look forward to a winter of comfort.

This was assured by a bequest of $100 for their care in the will of Clarence Gale Allen, Washingtonian, who died on August 4.

Allen said the gift was in appreciation of the pleasure they gave his mother.

The remainder of the $1,000 estate went to his widow.

'Mystery Girl,' 11 Years Dead, Is Identified

OMAHA, Neb., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Eleven years of tireless, unremitting work by an Omaha newspaper city editor today had finally resulted in establishing the identity of Omaha's "mystery girl," murdered here in 1919 and long ago written off the books of police from one end of the country to the other.

The girl was identified by an Omaha World Herald reporter who took her photograph to Carthage, Ill., and presented it to John W. McConnell, retired farmer. McConnell said the girl was his daughter, Mrs. Beulah McConnell Wagle, of Colchester, Ill., who married Henry "Kelly" Wagle, a liquor dealer, in 1919. The couple, he said, left Carthage on a honeymoon from which Mrs. Wagle never returned. Wagle died a little over a year ago, shot down by gangster enemies.

Since the day in November, 1919, when a farmer discovered the girl's body, shot through the head, in a lonely ravine north of Omaha, the establishment of the identity of the "mystery girl" has been the hobby of Benjamin Sylvester, city editor of the Omaha World-Herald. Thousands of people, many of them from far places, viewed the girl's body in 1919, as it lay for days in a morgue here awaiting possible identification. Dozens of clews were traced down by police and by newspapermen.

The girl was finally buried in a potter's field and the case assigned by police to the limbo of unsolved crimes. Every year, on the morning after Memorial Day, a wreath of flowers was found on the "mystery girl's" grave, but this mysterious memorial was generally ascribed to the generosity of some unknown Omaha citizen whose heart was touched by the girl's youth, beauty and mysterious, lonely death.

Sylvester, however, kept up his search, convinced that, sooner or later, the girl's identity would be established. It was a photograph he had caused to be taken while the girl lay in the morgue here that was identified by her father.

Three sisters of the girl, as well as her daughter, corroborated the father's identification of the photograph. The picture was also shown to John W. Moon, former associate of Wagle, and he said the picture resembled Mrs. Wagle. Arrangements are being made by the girl's family to have the body exhumed and brought to Carthage, Ill., for burial.

After Mrs. Wagle left Carthage on her honeymoon in 1919, the family received postcards from her, mailed from St. Louis, saying that she expected to visit Omaha on the trip. Three years ago the family queried the Omaha police concerning the "mystery girl," but no identification was made.

Wagle returned to Illinois after the honeymoon but was never charged with the girl's death. His death over a year ago was engineered by rival alcohol peddlers who resented the widening reaches of his influence in the bootlegging world of the middle west. He was waylaid and died with 36 slugs from shotguns and pistols in his body.

G. A. R. IN CINCINNATI FOR ANNUAL MEETING

Many Thousands of Visitors Expected To Attend 64th Encampment.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The advance guard of the grand army of the republic bivouacked here tonight ready for its 64th annual encampment.

Between 600 and 800 voting delegates, 2,000 other members and added thousands of visitors from allied patriotic organizations were en route to Cincinnati from nearly every state in the Union. Commander-in-Chief Edwin J. Foster, bearing the title which originated with Ulysses S. Grant, arrived yesterday and said everything was ready for "the boys."

The encampment opens tomorrow with a concert by the United States marine band, sent here by special act of congress, and dedication of three trees and a flagstaff in Eden park. The annual conference of federated patriotic societies allied with the G. A. R., will be held later in the day with a banquet in the evening.

The first business session will be held Wednesday, the two preceding days being spent in attesting to credentials, meetings of the executive committee council of administration and conferences between departmental commanders.

A second business session Thursday, including election of officers will leave everything clear for a pilgrimmage up the Ohio river Friday to the birthplace of General Grant at Point Pleasant, Ohio. His grandson, U. S. Grant, III., will be officer of the day. The trip will end the encampment.

Allied organizations meeting here next week include the 36th convention of the National Association of Army Nurses of the Civil War, the 48th convention of the National Women's Relief Corps, the 44th national convention of the Ladies of the G. A. R., the 40th national convention of Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War, the 49th annual encampment of Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War, and the 44th national encampment of the Pittsburgh Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War.

The services in Eden park tomorrow by the women's relief corps will dedicate one tree to the memory of William C. Johnson, another to Clara Barton, famous Civil War nurse, and another to Commander-in-Chief Foster. The daughters of Union veterans will dedicate a flagstaff in memory of their fathers, presented by Dorothy Houghton, national patriotic instructor of the group. Foster will make an address which will be broadcast nationally.

G. M. Mowry, of Valley Head, Ala., a Confederate veteran of the war, asked permission to attend the Union encampment and was promptly invited to do so. William Monahan, Cincinnati, another Confederate soldier, attended the recent meeting of Union veterans at the dedication of the Grant Memorial at Bethel, Ohio, and has been invited to attend the encampment next week.

G. O. P. To Devise Strategy at Chicago

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(AP)—The campaign of the republican congressional committee to assist party members in the fall elections will be directed from Chicago, where national headquarters will be opened the first week in September.

This was announced today by Representative Wood, of Indiana, chairman of the committee, who will take personal charge of the Chicago headquarters.

Wood also announced the selection of Representative Simmons, of Nebraska, as director of the Chicago speakers' bureau. He succeeds former Representative Newton, of Minnesota, who resigned to become one of President Hoover's secretaries.

Eastern headquarters already have been opened in New York under the direction of Representative Tilson, of Connecticut, house republican leader. Activities in this section began early because of the Maine state election September 8.

Tilson, who has been eastern director for a number of years, is now in Maine.

Harry Flood Byrd Host to Apple Men

WINCHESTER, Va., Aug. 23.—(AP)—Former Governor Harry F. Byrd was picnic host today to approximately 4,000 apple growers of Virginia and nearby states, entertaining at his Rosemont orchard, near Berryville.

In some respects it was a surprise party for Mr. Byrd. He had planned to entertain 2,000 guests with fried chicken, baked ham, potato chips and refreshments, but the number of guests doubled expectations. A rush order was sent here for more food, however, and a bountiful luncheon was spread.

Many took their entire families to the picnic after hearing a radio announcement that "Governor Byrd is giving chicken and ham picnic for all growers." Hundreds came from West Virginia and Maryland.

Mr. Byrd made a speech welcoming everybody. His apple-grower picnics were inaugurated four years ago primarily for orchardists to discuss vital problems among themselves.

Youth Held in Jail On Attack Charge

TUXEDO, N. Y., Aug. 23.—(AP)—William Horrner, 24, was held to await the action of the Orange county grand jury upon his arraignment here today before Justice of the Peace Elijah Pringle on charges of felonious assault on two girls at a summer camp in Harriman park.

Horrner, formerly a cook at the camp, was arrested last night near Stony Point, after a five-day search. He told Justice Pringle he was born in Germany and was not a citizen of the United States.

Mrs. Poole States That Clubs Have Closer Union

"A most encouraging sign is the closer union of the clubs of the country," said Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, first vice president of the general federation, in the course of her report at the Denver biennial. Continuing, Mrs. Poole said:

"This has been helped of course by the work on the foundation, for women do not give freely without knowing why they give and the many questions asked and answered have awakened club women everywhere to the value of the work being done and the necessity for the adequate financing of this work. To me that is the great gain of the year, increased loyalty and knowledge. A constantly changing personnel means a constant repetition of the background, traditions, present-day problems and future plans absolutely necessary. This task should be the work of the vice presidents to a great degree and a most satisfying duty it is. Club human nature does not differ from other kinds of human nature. It has to be shown. When we fail to achieve the results desired let us not always point to the club woman who doesn't know and therefore doesn't understand, rather let us point to ourselves who have failed to more closely link together our far-flung club family.

"And it is a far-flung family, for the sun never sets upon our membership. Most gratifying work has been done in opening the doors of our club membership to the women of other lands and only those of us who have met and talked with these women know just what this larger field can mean to us. That splendid group the Federation of Business and Professional Women has for the past few years conducted under its able leaders world acquaintance tours and are now on the eve of forming an international organization. They are filling a long-felt want of the women who in Europe are just entering the business and professional world. But what of the woman engaged in the greatest profession in the world, homemaking, and just beginning to realize that she is a part of the life of her community. She is just waiting for us I know from my personal contacts with her last year in Greece, Bulgaria and Jugoslavia. Adventures in understanding for them and for us, for we both could give and both receive. International understanding would be the key note and who knows how far that adventure might lead us?

Volunteer Hostesses Keep Columbus Clubhouse Center of Social Life During Summer Months

The photograph presents a group of women at the Columbus Woman's Clubhouse Association, after attending the weekly luncheon featured every Thursday. Seated are the ladies who are serving as hostesses for this month. Reading from left to right, Mrs. Sophia Willis, chairman; Mrs. William R. Blanchard, Mrs. F. B. Gordon, president of the Woman's Club; Mrs. James Lockhart, Mrs. Cecil Neill, Mrs. John C. Martin, Jr., Mrs. Adelle Dooley and Mrs. Frank Lummus. Photograph by Don Johnson, of Columbus.

COLUMBUS, Ga., Aug. 23.—Under the regime of volunteer hostesses, the Columbus Woman's Club has been the center of the social life for the women of the community during the summer months. The ladies acting as hostesses are chosen from the governing board and with the aid of other members of the club they are making the Thursday "open house" days outstanding events of the social calendar.

Entertain at Club.

On these days members and non-members are invited to entertain in the spacious club. Flowers from the gardens of the club members are used for the decoration and at 1 o'clock a three-course hot luncheon is served for 75 cents. At 5 o'clock tea, consisting of a salad course and ice tea, is served for 50 cents. Both luncheon and tea carry the privilege of cards. The food is delicious, the service excellent, the hostesses lending their butlers for the day, and the spacious club forms a beautiful place for entertaining. That the women of Columbus have enjoyed the club is evidenced by the number attending each week. Beginning with around 50, the attendance has grown until last week 155 were served, 75 for luncheon and 70 in the afternoon.

At the end of each month the chairman of the hostess committee is able to turn a substantial check into the treasury. These checks are being used to help liquidate the club debt.

An added feature of the entertainment for this week was given by Mrs. Edward F. Lummus, who took moving pictures during the luncheon hour. Mrs. Lummus will show the pictures the following week at tea. In spite of the fact that Thursday was the opening day for the Country Club invitation golf tournament, and that there were several large private parties for the day, there was a large attendance.

Aside from the open-house days, when the hostesses are prepared to serve the members, they gladly take parties at any time. One of the most elegant receptions of the summer was held at the club under the supervision of the volunteer hostesses. The club is open to its members at any time and they are invited to come for a game of bridge or any other amusement. There is at all times the club janitor who is ready to serve the members.

August Hostesses.

The hostesses for this month include: Mrs. Sophia Willis, chairman; Mesdames F. B. Gordon, William R. Blanchard, Frank Lummus, Willard Cooper, Cecil Neill, Bass Lewis, Walter Richards, and James Lockhart.

Seventh District Convention Meets in Acworth Oct. 23

Acworth will entertain the twentieth annual convention of the Seventh District Federation of Women's Clubs which will be held in Acworth Thursday, October 23. Mrs. E. M. Bailey is president of the seventh district. By way of information, the first convention of the state federation was held in the seventh district at Rome, Ga., and the seventh district was also the first in the state to form a district federation.

Lesche Club.

The first club organized in the state was the Lesche Club at Dalton, Ga., and the Acworth Carrie Dyer Reading Club was organized by a member of the Lesche Club 32 years ago. At this meeting there were six charter members; two have died, two moved away and two are still active members. Besides the Carrie Dyer Reading Club there are two other organizations in Acworth, the W. C. T. U. and the P.-T. A., which belong to the Federation, and the three will be hostess organizations to the convention in October.

An interesting program is being arranged for the meeting, the outstanding speakers to be Mrs. S. V. Sanford and Mrs. M. E. Judd. Mrs. Sanford, the state president, from Athens, is a district product, having spent her girlhood days in Marietta. Mrs. Judd is vice president at large, and is also president of the Dalton Woman's Club. Her home at Dalton is one of the show places in the district. She is a member of the State Forestry Association, making a trip to China recently by invitation to demonstrate there the best methods of reforestation.

Counties in District.

Representatives from the clubs in the district are expected to be present on this occasion. Acworth is 33 miles from Atlanta on the Dixie highway and is accessible from all district clubs. Bartow, Cobb, Gordon, Haralson, Murray, Polk, Paulding and Walker counties compose the seventh congressional district. Clubs making up the roster include Cartersville, Cherokee; Kingston, History; Taylorsville, Feltonian; Cobb County Federation; Acworth, Carrie Dyer Reading; Austell, Woman's; Kennesaw, Woman's; Marietta, Woman's; Marietta, Woman's Junior; Smyrna, Woman's; Spring Hill, Woman's; Calhoun, Woman's; Tallapoosa, Thursday; Chatsworth, Woman's; Eton, Civic League; Cedartown, Rockmart, Dallas, Draketown, La-Fayette, Dalton Lesche and Dalton Woman's Clubs.

Millen Club Plans Program For 1930-31

Millen Woman's Club has planned a most interesting and instructive program for the year 1930-31, namely, "Departmental Work Supplemented by Federation News Items." Under the heading, "American Homes," are two programs on "Leisure," "Child Leisure" and "Adult Leisure Activities." With these programs are musical numbers and readings suitable for the subject "Little Boy Blue." Field-Nevin, a vocal solo, "The Toy Strewn House," a reading and two piano solos, "Mignonette" and "Honeysuckle," by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, the composer.

Under literature are two programs dealing with the Putlitzer prizes of 1930, one being the novel, "Laughing Boy." This novel will be criticised and selections read from it. The other program will be prize drama, "Green Pastures." The music for these two occasions will be a violin solo and spirituals sung by the club chorus. "Deep River" and "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen," both by Burleigh.

Another program will be devoted to "Music and Poetry" in which the Pulitzer prize poems will be discussed as will "Woman's Artistic Service as a Citizen." An entire program on music will be given in the month of March, the paper for this occasion being "The Trend of Modern Music," while the music will be furnished by visiting artists, and an interpretative dance will be featured.

Under library extension there will be a program with papers showing the proper use of the library and book reviews of popular books will be given. Millen's library is young and is being very much enjoyed, so it is hoped that this will prove an instructive program.

In February there will be a public welfare program devoted to Georgia needs and reforms. The department of legislation will be represented in May with papers on the "World Court," the "Naval Conference" and problems affecting war and peace Folk songs of the nations will be sung by members of the club in costumes. At the beginning of every program federation news items will be selected and read by club members.

The personnel of the program and music committees are: program, Mesdames R. H. Brinson, Robie Gray, Ben Neal and Dean Brinson; music, Mesdames Cleveland Thompson, J. R. Wainwright, W. C. Perkins and L. B. Fripe.

Mrs. Harder's Speech Given At Chautauqua

Recognizing the disillusion and disappointment which has been felt at women's part in public affairs, Mrs. William Harder, retiring president of the Ohio State Federation of Women's Clubs and chairman of the program committee at the Denver convention, blamed the situation on club women themselves, in an address before the Chautauqua, N. Y., session held last month of the Institute on Problems Facing Our Country held in the hall of philosophy.

Was in Athens.

Mrs. Harder conducted the club institute of the Georgia federation held in Athens, at the university summer school.

"There is a general feeling that we have not made good," said Mrs. Harder, "and we ourselves have not been entirely satisfied with the results of our participation in public life. It is our own fault if we have not been properly represented. Club members should choose the women they want and support them," she declared. "It is inspiring that men look for better things from women than they do from leaders of their own sex. It is a challenge and a responsibility."

This strong statement to the club women of the country came at the conclusion of Mrs. Harder's address on "Public Opinion and Propaganda." In the course of her remarks Mrs. Harder quoted extensively from a symposium on propaganda in a recent issue of the "Forum." From her own experience, Mrs. Harder spoke of the lack of knowledge on matters pertaining to the World Court which she found in a club of women of at least average intelligence. She spoke of the necessity of a discriminating intelligence on the part of voters, and said that the women should gain such intelligence from their club work.

Intelligent Opinion.

The question of whether our government is to continue will be settled by our success in securing an intelligent public opinion, Mrs. Harder declared. The hopes of other people hang upon the success of our great democratic experiment.

After mentioning the press, the motion picture and the radio as the three greatest influences in the creation of public opinion, Mrs. Harder delivered an attack upon the integrity of the press, deploring that the newspaper is a source of ready-made opinion. The press today is largely a business proposition, she declared, and looks to profits first. Therefore one cannot look to the press for intelligent consideration of both sides of any question.

"The great need of the United States is for fundamental building of character and intelligence," said Mrs. Harder. "It is the high mission of the federated women's clubs to be the leader in such an effort. It is a task which must be done quietly, which will not bring advertisement to any club through headlines, but it is a worthy task. And to accomplish it properly, the federation must be free of all commitments to any cause but the cause of public welfare."

Calls Upon Guests.

At the conclusion of Mrs. Harder's address, Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker called upon each of the guests of the week to describe some piece of specious propaganda which was once believed in America, but has since been discredited. Answers were given by Miss Emily Louise Plumley, Mrs. Harder, Mrs. Ben Hooper, Mrs. W. R. Alvord and Miss Violet Oakley.

In answer to a question, "What is the most dangerous delusion of today?" proposed from the floor by Mrs. Mary Miles Colvin, of Ohio, Miss Emily Louise Plumley said that the greatest danger came from the reiterated falsehood that all peace movements are somehow gaining their principal backing from soviet Russia. Nearly all propagandists, said Miss Plumley, have the ulterior motive of making people seem other than they are.

Lexington Woman's Club Celebrates Tallulah's Twenty-First Birthday

Lexington Woman's Club's August meeting was held at the home of Mrs. R. L. Brooks with Mrs. H. T. Callaway as hostess and after the president, Mrs. W. T. Cunningham, called the meeting to order and Mrs. T. W. Crawford read the collect, Mrs. H. F. Colquit was welcomed as a new member.

Reports Given.

The educational chairman, Mrs. G. A. Barron, reported that the beds of shrubbery at the school had been worked. Mrs. T. W. Crawford, chairman of public welfare committee, reported the death of the tuberculosis patient the club had been rendering meals to. Mrs. R. H. Brooks sponsored music for the funeral Mrs. W. H. Maxwell, chairman of the swimming pool committee, reported no definite plans as made. This committee had had a conference and would await the decision of an engineer as to the safest locality for the pool. Mrs. A. G. Rice, finance committee chairman, reported $3.75 realized from playlet sponsored by the club.

Mrs. H. McWhorter reported Mr. Cabaniss appreciation of seven dollars scholarship money to be used at Camp Wilkins. Mrs. H. McWhorter, community service chairman, reminded the departmental chairman of the importance of presenting their plans. She also gave several interesting international relationship topics.

Tallulah.

After the business meeting was concluded, Mrs. E. Reynolds, Tallulah chairman, took charge of the program. Representatives of 10 members who attended Georgia Federation Club institute in Athens, last July, including Mesdames E. D. Thompson, W. H. Maxwell and H. McWhorter gave splendid accounts of the different institute days.

Mrs. Earl Reynolds conducted a unique questionnaire on Tallulah Falls school. The conserved sweets heaped on the table were received by Miss Esther Barron, representing "Miss Tallulah," on her twenty-first birthday with the following words.

Tallulah Birthday Shower.

Dear Friends: Do you marvel that I should consider it an honor to represent "Miss Tallulah," your guest of honor today? For you did plan for her a birthday shower, didn't you say?
Who ever heard of a birthday cake, made up of "jars"?
Well, I'll risk even that from these Ma's.
For 21 years the heart of your federation work, we who make up the Light in the Mountain have been.
It is to your 21 years of fealty, we are grateful, we coming young women and men.
Just yesterday was I told I might have the privilege of expressing to you Miss Tallulah's pride in your hearts of gold.
But many yesterdays have I known of the showers you have given us manifold.
21 years ago we were as naught.
This year from our school halls there were 21 graduates,
Who had been taught.
Today it is fit that you bring me a shower of sweets.
That God's fruits be conserved by your useful hands for God's mountain flowers of humanity, growing in such rocky lands.
What should be more meet?
Whether your showers have been sweets, linens or funds in the past
You have done your part in giving us opportunities that through our lives will make an impress that will last.
And in return we feel it truly so, that we have given you a worthy purpose to strive for and know.
That through this noble purpose, you clubwomen have developed hearts of gold.
And lo! the blessing is returned as given manifold.
Without such birthday celebrations as this shower of sweets represents from you Lexington clubwomen today
We could never have lived to be an institution, worthy of your support that does pay.
Does pay to you through the lives you help to mold.
Does pay to us for the world of opportunity your efforts to us unfold.
As your federation child grows each year in usefulness and pride.
May you realize it is because you back her stride by stride.
As a 21-year-old citizen, I "Miss Tallulah," a representative of the heart of your federation, the Light in the Mountains, do cast my ballot—a prayer.
That of God's richest blessings, the Lexington Woman's Club, whose motto is service, may not only receive but deserve her share.

The program was concluded with an appropriate song given by Mrs. R. H. Brooks. The September meeting will be held with Mrs. T. W. Crawford.

D. A. R. Educational Work Is Noteworthy Achievement

BY MRS. STEWART COLLEY,
State Editor.

Few people realize the vast amount of educational work that the National D. A. R. is doing, the national society in general and the Georgia D. A. R. in particular. Recently a first-honor graduate of one of our accredited high schools came to a D. A. R. chapter regent and told her of her earnest desire and determination to go to college, if a possible way could be provided. She stated to the regent that she would have been able to go but for the fact that cotton was bringing only about 10 cents a pound and that her father was a farmer. Immediately the regent thought of Mrs. Mann and the Fanny Trammell memorial loan fund. A letter was written to Mrs. Mann at once and in less than a week this girl was assured of the fact that she would be financed through the first year of college anyway. If all Georgia D. A. R. could have seen that girl's face when she was told of this arrangement they would have felt repaid for their work for educational purposes. Mrs. Will Mann is truly a wonderful financier as well as one of the most capable women of the state. As chairman of this memorial loan fund, her work has been outstanding. Mrs. Mann is also state president of the service star mothers and was a democratic committeewoman at our last presidential election. Incidentally she is one of the truest friends an editor can have.

John Ball chapter, of Irwinton, is the only chapter that we know anything about that meets all summer. Their August meeting was held at the home of Misses Izetta and Willie Davis. Mrs. Victor Davidson, regent, presided and reports were made by all committee chairmen present. Mrs. Gertrude Carswell, chairman of the quilt committee, showed the finished quilt top and stated that an all-day quilting party would be given later on. (This makes us all wish that we were members of the John Ball chapter.) An ex-regent pin was presented Mrs. C. G. Kitchens by the chapter. Mrs. Kitchens accepted the pin in a most gracious manner. Mrs. John Porter, Jr., had charge of the program which consisted of a study of the state of New Hampshire.

The D. A. R. magazine is the official organ of the national society. Mrs. J. T. Wood, of Savannah, is state chairman. She issues the following plea for new subscribers: "Through the D. A. R. column of The Atlanta Constitution, I want to plead for a larger circulation of the D. A. R. magazine. Last year there was a slight decrease in the subscriptions. This year I am expecting a large increase. Our magazine is something of which every D. A. R. may well be proud. It is a staunch, strong, vigorous exponent of Americanism of the best kind. There are many ways in which the magazine is helpful, for on its pages we find a happy blending of the modern with the past —always an article on a subject belonging to early days as well as topics of the day. Should a program leader be at a loss for subjects, she need only turn to our magazine, for there she will find accounts of famous American conflicts, authentic illustrations of historic scenes and descriptions of political conditions of the Revolutionary period. The price of our magazine is so low that every D. A. R. can subscribe. The real value of the magazine is more than can be estimated in dollars and cents. Many librarians value our magazine, for it contains many articles of great value to the work of the library. The accounts of the work of the chapters are always interesting and often inspiring to other chapter members. One chapter in Georgia is the proud possessor of every copy of the magazine from 1906 through 1930. This chapter is the John Houston chapter of Thomasville. A silver loving cup is offered each year to the chapter securing the largest number of new subscriptions. This trophy is given to the successful chapter regardless of membership. I am counting on the regents to make this a banner year for the D. A. R. magazine."

Employment Service Finds Situation Much Improved

Agency Continuously Active Finding Positions for City's Hundreds of Jobless, Says Executive.

Assurance that the employment situation in Atlanta is improving, and announcement of plans for increased activity in finding work for the jobless were given Saturday in a statement by W. Henry Smith, his first official word since his election last week as president of the Community Employment Service.

Outstanding in the statement were these details:

1. The Community Employment Service has found positions for more persons in the first eight months of 1930 than in the same period of 1929.

2. Miss Irene Colwell, secretary, and other agents of the Community Employment Service, will start this week to visit business houses and industrial plants in cities near Atlanta, seeking more openings for Atlantans who need jobs.

3. Atlanta's situation regarding unemployment is normal, but there is no room here for unemployed from other centers.

Community Chest Unit.

The Community Employment Service, located at Poplar and Fairlie streets, is one of the 39 societies of the Community Chest and gives its services without cost to applicant or employer, Smith pointed out. Working in co-operation with all other agencies of the Chest, it is enabled to combine the maximum of helpfulness, he explained, by giving the means of independence to those who have been discouraged by circumstances.

"Like that of most societies of the Community Chest," he said, "the Community Employment Service operates with a thought of practical helpfulness. Ours we consider a public service—not charity, but a far more effective service than that, because it prevents the need of charity; because it gives the means of self-support and of new courage to those who need it most sorely.

"Our work consists not only in interviewing, classifying and listing applicants, but in working with every resource to find jobs in which to place them. With thousands of applicants, we cannot wait for jobs to turn up, but must seek them out. Accordingly, our workers are constantly active by telephone, mail and personal solicitation, seeking to develop openings.

Valuable Service.

"Our service, free of every charge because this is a public agency without ties or subsidies, we consider equally valuable for the employer and the person seeking employment. Our applicants are persons of every qualification, from the trained executive to the unskilled casual worker; and, consequently, we are enabled to ask business houses and plants to look to this public agency to supply all their employes. Householders are asked to look to us for domestic and yard workers.

"It is our observation that the situation in Atlanta as regards employment is neither unusual nor abnormal. At the same time, however, it must be said that Atlanta has available as many workers as are needed, and that there is hardly room for any more.

"Because it is a key city in geographical position and business importance, Atlanta may have at times a number of unemployed out of proportion to its conditions. In other words, a large number of idle persons here may not mean anything as regards general business conditions, because to this accessible center drift naturally many job-seekers who would not be attracted elsewhere."

Besides Smith as president, the following other officers were named: C. P. Roberts, vice president; C. H. McFee, treasurer; Miss Colwell, secretary.

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED by RALPH T. JONES

S. R. O.

by Ralph T. Jones

Managerial changes in Atlanta's theaters have been coming so fast recently that it is almost necessary to take pencil and paper to figure out. Fox, Georgia, Paramount and Capitol are all operating with new hands at their helms from those they had two weeks ago. And, according to apparently well founded rumors, other changes are not far away in the future.

Particular interest, and congratulation, centers about Carter Barron as he assumes the management of the Fox. Under the new operation of that theater as announced in The Constitution last Sunday, Carter becomes manager, with Lionel H. Keene, southern executive for Loew's, Inc., exercising a sort of fatherly supervision. Carter has risen rapidly as a theater executive but not too rapidly to fit the magnificent record he has made ever since he joined the profession. He made good at the Capitol and, when he moved his official lares and penates from that house to his new office at the Fox, last Friday night, he carried with him the good wishes of, probably, a greater host of friends than nine out of any ten Atlantans could muster.

And don't forget that, with Greta Garbo in "Romance" as his first offering, Carter begins at the Fox under the finest possible auspices, screenically speaking.

Old friends came back last week when the Erlanger Theater Players arrived in the city preparatory to the opening of their fall production season just one week from tomorrow. Old friends with some new faces which promise rapid election to the limited list of Atlanta's stage favorites.

If, however, the Players just give us as good entertainment as they did last spring, nothing more need be asked. But Manager Haase and Director McKee promises even better things. We shall see.

I am particularly interested, this week, in the picture at the Paramount. Both Ruth Chatterton and Clive Brook are leading weaknesses of mine and their appearance together, in a picture based on a story by Gouverneur Morris, should prove something exceptional. And the title, "Anybody's Woman," is alluring itself.

The announcement that Lupe Velez was coming to Atlanta in person seems to have been, to say the least, premature. The little Mexican star is too busy on the studio lots to make personal appearances now, she says. but, perhaps, later—

Grand Feature Has Will Rogers For First Half

Will Rogers in "So This Is London" and "Children of Pleasure," featuring Lawrence Gray and an all-star cast, will be the attractions at Loew's Grand theater for the coming week.

America's genial comedian has never been offered to the public in a wittier mood than in the George M. Cohan farce, dealing with the happenings in the English capital.

Patrons of the cinema will view for the first time in Atlanta "Children of Pleasure," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, on the last three days of the week. Night life and high society figure in the play, which is a musical romance of the famous New York Tin Pan alley.

Lawrence Gray, who will be remembered as recently starring with Marion Davies and the Duncan Sisters, has the title role, with Wynne Gibson, Helen Johnson, Lee Kohlmar, Kenneth Thompson and May Boley in supporting parts.

"Puttin' on the Ritz" For Tenth Street

Monday and Tuesday the Tenth Street theater presents "Puttin' on the Ritz" with Harry Richman. This is a story of the private life of Broadway's great entertainers in a glorious medley of songs, fisticuffs, bright lights, laughter, pathos, romance and drama.

Jack Holt in his famous air drama, "Flight," with Lila Lee and Ralph Graves, is the feature billed for Wednesday. Thursday and Friday bring the screen's funniest comedy pair, Charlie Murray and George Sidney, in "The Cohens and Kellys in Scotland." Also a Clark and McCullough comedy, "All Steamed Up."

"Ladies of Leisure," with Barbara Stanwyck, Lowell Sherman and Ralph Graves, is the main attraction for Saturday. Also Laurel and Hardy in "Below Zero."

Many Famous Faces on Atlanta Screens This Week

Featured players on Atlanta talking screens this week look like a modern hall of Hollywood fame. At upper left, above, are seen Greta Garbo and Lewis Stone in a scene from "Romance," the new production starring the alluring star which inaugurates the new operation of the Fox theater, under the managerial guidance of Carter Barron. It is an MGM picture, of course. At upper right is Lupe Velez and Paul Cavanaugh, in a scene from "The Storm," which also inaugurates new management at the Capitol, now operated by Universal Pictures Corporation. This, likewise of course, is a Universal picture. Ruth Chatterton and Clive Brook are seen at left, center, as they appear in "Anybody's Woman," which promises big things at the Paramount, while the world famous actor, Cyril Maude, with Phillips Holmes and Frances Dade on either hand, is shown at right center as he appears in "Grumpy" at the Georgia. Lower left is from "Conspiracy," a thriller at the Metropolitan, with Bessie Love and Hugh Trevor as the featured performers. Lower right is from "Clancy on Wall Street," which brings Charlie Murray and Lucien Littlefield to the Rialto. The two small inserts are of Nancy Carroll in "Devil's Holiday" at the Cameo and Will Rogers in "So This is London," at the Grand.

'Sport Carnival' At Paramount

Well-Known Performers Featured in Stage Presentation.

"Sport Carnival," a brilliant presentation featured by performers of top ranking in the vaudeville world, is the stage offering at the Paramount theater this week. It is given in conjunction with the showing of "Anybody's Woman," intriguing story of a woman's fight up from the depths to happiness, and starring Ruth Chatterton and Clive Brook.

Featured performers on the stage are Charlie Hill, comedian who is known wherever the stage exists, for his originality, and Lore Hoffman, classed as the finest singing soprano in vaudeville today. These two, besides doing their individual acts, work together in a combination of humor and melody that is absolutely fascinating in its clever effectiveness.

The Three White Flashes, premier exponents of roller skating, are also in the cast of "Sport Carnival."

Lou Forbes and his Paramount grand orchestra will again be featured in the pit and on the stage while the 12 lovely Paramount Rockets will have new dances and new costumes to display their feminine charm and terpsichorean ability.

Adolph Goebel has a novel idea for his week's presentation at the console of the mighty Wurlitzer. This week, also, there is an unusually important item among the list of short screen subjects, always an important part of Paramount programs. This is the classic cartoon comedy, "Swing You Sinners," which marks a new height of achievement for this popular type of entertainment. There will, of course, be other shorts and the Paramount Sound News to complete the bill.

Katherine Brush Serial Success For Buckhead

Katherine Brush's Saturday Evening Post serial, "Young Men of Manhattan," featuring Claudette Colbert and Norman Foster, comes to the Buckhead theater Monday and Tuesday. It is a snappy, modern, romantic story of two ambitious newspaper writers, a handsome man and a beautiful girl, to whom life and love and pleasure come too easy.

"Framed," Radio Pictures' stirring drama, will be seen for the first time in Atlanta Wednesday and Thursday. It is a most unusual, gripping story of a slain gangster's daughter, who swears her father's death will not go unavenged and for five years plans toward that end. Evelyn Brent, one of the most fascinating dramatic actresses in talking pictures, portrays the lone feminine role. Regis Toomey plays opposite.

Hoot Gibson in "The Mounted Stranger," a romantic western story, is the attraction for Friday and Saturday. Louise Lorraine plays opposite. Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy will be seen and heard in "Man o' War." The amateur contest will offer a variety of unusual talent on the stage at 8 o'clock Saturday evening.

New Feature Of Wall Street On Rialto Bill

Charles Murray Takes Leading Role in "Clancy in Wall Street."

An amusing example of an humble tradesman who never took a chance on anything more vital than matching nickels, suddenly seized with the get-rich-quick madness and the fascination of the New York Stock exchange, is depicted in "Clancy in Wall Street," which opens for its premier southern showing at the Rialto theater Monday.

Charles Murray, known as a comedian without a peer, plays the part of an Irish plumber who gets into a series of uproarious escapades as a result of having attempted to "bull" the stock market. The experiences of Clancy and his Scotch partner, Littlefield, will keep you laughing until the final fade-out.

The Rialto offers a wonderful "kiddy revue" that will get you around the heart. It's entitled "Hello, Sunshine!" The program also includes a beautiful color classic and the very latest News reels.

Mae Murray Plays At Alamo Monday

"Nothing in the world that you own is as perfect as when you wanted it," George Barraud tells Mae Murray in "Peacock Alley," the all-talking Tiffany production showing Monday only at the Alamo No. 2.

"Peacock Alley," tells the story of Claire Tree, a modern and sophisticated girl who, however, is old-fashioned enough to believe in sanctified nuptial vows and who faces the choice of marriage without love or love without marriage. The action takes place mostly in a fashionable New York hotel, where the heroine finds herself entangled in a police net spread to put an end to the trafficing by women in the peacock alley foyer.

KENTVILLE, Nova Scotia.—At a directors' meeting of the United Fruit Growers of Nova Scotia Limited, Harry O. Bishop, of Kentville, was reappointed general manager for the third successive year. The organization is the largest co-operative apple-growing unit in Canada.

Velez' Latest, "The Storm," On Capitol Screen

New Universal Special Has Southern Premiere To Launch New Management.

As a special attraction to signalize the first week for the Capitol theater under its new Universal Pictures Corporation operation, the management has secured Lupe Valez's latest starring picture, "The Storm." The showing here will be the southern premiere for this outstanding screen production.

In addition to the screen attractions, the theater announces a stage show which will present a number of star radio performers who have frequently broadcast from Atlanta's local stations.

"The Storm" is one of the most sensational pictures ever made, featuring some of the most astounding photographic sequences taken in the far north in the midst of winter's blizzards. It is the story of two men and a girl, imprisoned by the northern winter in a cabin far in the northwestern wilds. The struggle of the two men for the girl and the terrible sacrifice which the loser accepts forms a dramatic story of tremendous emotional appeal.

A splendid supporting cast includes William Boyd, Paul Cavanaugh, Alphonz Wthier and Ernie S. Adams. It is a Universal picture produced by Carl Laemmle, Jr., and directed by William Wyler.

The showing will provide an auspicious introduction of the new Capitol management to the Atlanta theatergoing public.

West End Offers Excellent Program

The West End theater offers its patrons an excellent bill this week, beginning with "The Texan," with Gary Cooper, Monday and Tuesday.

Joe Schenck and Gus Van, in "They Learned About Women," will be the feature for Wednesday. They are supported by the dainty little star, Bessie Love.

The picture for Thursday and Friday will be "Caught Short," with Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in the leading roles. Anita Page and Charles Morton furnish the juvenile roles in the fast comedy of Wall Street.

Saturday, S. S. Van Dine's story, "The Bishop Murder Case," will be the feature. This picture has a wonderful cast, including Basil Rathbone, Leila Hyams, George F. Marion and Roland Young.

BRANDON, Manitoba.—White leghorns led the Manitoba egg-laying contest at the Brandon Experimental farm at the end of the 37th week. These birds, owned by J. R. Beer, of Brandon, had a total production record of 1,636.2 points and 1,634 eggs. Barred rocks owned by F. E. Foster,

Henry Santley On Georgia Stage

Famous Vaudevillian Brings Act Featuring "Musical Soldiers of Fortune."

With Henry Santley and his musical Soldiers of Fortune announced as featuring the vaudeville program at the Georgia theater this week, Atlanta theatergoers will find themselves offered entertainment of far greater than usual value. For Santley's vaudeville productions are known all over the world for their high entertainment content and, in addition, they command a salary that even the largest of theaters can afford only occasionally.

Santley recruited his present musical aggregation from all over the world. As a pioneer in stage band presentation, he has long been noted and this year his production is said to be the best he has ever had.

He precedes his big stage showing with two clever vaudeville acts, consisting of Tim Ryan and Irene Noblete, in rapid, crossfire comedy, and the Dakotas, assisted by "Chic" Cooper, in a bewildering act of western and Australia specialties.

Then comes the big Santley presentation, with musicians, dancers, singers and comedians following one another in such rapid succession that the audience is kept in a constant state of enthusiastic laughter and applause. Other featured performers with the act are Marie Higgin and Skeeter Justus.

The screen feature for the week at the Georgia is "Grumpy," with a splendid cast headed by the distinguished legitimate actor, Cyril Maude. The usual excellent short subjects and Sound News complete the bill for the week.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba.—The fish catch in the Prairie Provinces has doubled in the past five years, according to the Fish News Bulletin, having passed the $4,000,000 mark for the first time in 1929. The total catch was 562,000,000 pounds. These fisheries in 1929 gave employment to 7,500 men—some 800 more than the previous year—and used equipment to the value of $1,986,000.

'Anybody's Woman' Screen Feature At Paramount

Ruth Chatterton and Clive Brook Star in Remarkable Picture.

"Anybody's Woman," based upon a story written by Gouverneur Morris, and starring Ruth Chatterton and Clive Brook, is the feature attraction on the talking screen at the Paramount theater this week. Rarely have the two famous stars found a vehicle more perfectly adapted to their perfect artistry than this.

The picture was directed by Dorothy Arzner, the noted woman director, who was responsible for that earlier Chatterton success, "Sarah and Son."

On the same program the Paramount offers another stage presentation of more than average entertainment value in "Sport Carnival."

The story of "Anybody's Woman" is of a chorus girl who has drifted through life, prey to all men and helpless slave of circumstances, who sees a former brilliant lawyer at a drunken party. She marries the wreck of the once fine man and sets about to lift him back to the decency and happiness he had once known. The obstacles she encounters, including an unscrupulous former wife of the lawyer, and the manner in which she finally triumphs, forms the fascinating story of one of the season's most fascinating screen plays.

There is an unusually strong supporting cast, including Paul Lucas, Virginia Hammond, Huntly Gordon, Tom Patricola, Cecil Cunningham, etc. Zoe Akins and Doris Anderson wrote the screen play from the original story by Gouverneur Morris.

Customer—Last week I bought a tire cover from you, and now I want my money back.

Clerk—Why?

Customer—I put it on one of my tires and hadn't driven 10 miles before the blamed thing wore out!—The Pathfinder.

See What Stage Offers This Week!

The Fox theater, launching its career under the new joint operation of Fox and Loew's, Inc., with Carter Barron as manager, brings to the stage an enlarged and better than ever series of Fanchon and Marco "Ideas." This week the name of the Idea is "Eyes," with many featured performers. Shown at the right are Red Reicard and Christel Levine. Below, at the left, is Henry Santrey, originator of the stage band idea and one of vaudeville's most distinguished figures, who leads his "Infantrymen of Musical Fortune" onto the stage at Keith's Georgia for the week. And, at lower right, are two of the most famous performers of the day, in the persons of Charlie Hill, comedian, and Lora Hoffman, soprano supreme, who will delight patrons of the Paramount with their work in the "Sports Carnival" presentation.

Cyril Maude In World Famous Role at Georgia

"Grumpy" Brings Distinguished Actor as Star of Talking Screen.

Cyril Maude, one of the greatest of living actors, makes his local screen debut at the Georgia theater this week. The feature picture is "Grumpy," most famous of Mr. Maude's many outstanding vehicles. This is the play in which he has appeared more than fourteen hundred times in England, America and Australia.

Mr. Maude, when he consented to appear before the cameras of Hollywood, did so chiefly that his most famous role might be preserved for posterity. The picture, therefore, was made as closely as possible to coincide with the stage production and, with the exception of the added mobility of the screen, which permits of many improvements in staging—or locations—it is a faithful rendition of the notable play.

There is a cast as nearly perfect as imaginable in support of Mr. Maude. Heading it is Phillips Holmes, the young actor who scored so heavily as the younger brother in Nancy Carroll's hit, "The Devil's Holiday." Frances Dade, remembered for her work in "Raffles," provides the feminine half of the love interest, while Paul Lukas, Halliwell Hobbes, Paul Cavanaugh, Doris Luray, Colin Kenney and others complete the distinguished cast.

The story concerns a lovable old man, a retired lawyer, who sets out to recover a priceless diamond stolen from the sweetheart of his granddaughter. With the slenderest thread of a clue, the old man finally succeeds and not only turns a clever thief over to justice, but brings happiness into the hearts of two youngsters he loves better than his own life.

On the same program the Georgia offers as its vaudeville feature the famous Henry Santley and his musical Soldiers of Fortune. This is one of the most expensive and at the same time most popular vaudeville acts now on the stage and such an engagement is an announcement of more than customary importance in the local amusement world.

CALGARY, Alberta.—An economic survey of sheep ranching in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia is being undertaken by the Dominion Department of Agriculture under the direction of the agricultural economics branch in co-operation with the dominion experimental farms. This is the beginning of a program of research work in agricultural economics on behalf of the live stock industry.

MOOSE JAW, Saskatchewan.—The National Light and Power Company of Moose Jaw has ordered a new 10,000 k. w. generating unit from the C. A. Parsons Company, of England, delivery to be made early in 1931. Improvements and extensions to the plant amounting to $440,000 will begin in the near future, according to the local manager.

Just at present the country is paying a good deal of attention to the relief of sunburn.—The Pathfinder.

Thriller Stars Bessie Love At Metropolitan

Remarkable Story of Criminal Intrigue Provides Punch-Packed Entertainment.

With a magnificent cast headed by the alluring little blonde star, Bessie Love, and with a story of such enthralling dramatic punch that it holds every auditor spellbound and thrilled, "Conspiracy." Radio Pictures' great super-picture, comes to the Metropolitan this week.

It is doubtful if Bessie Love, despite all the successes in which she has been starred, ever played a more powerful story than this. It is the record of a brother and sister who set out to avenge themselves upon a powerful underworld ring which, through its traffic in illicit drugs, has brought about the disgrace and death of their father. Later in the story a third figure joins the pair, in the form of a newspaper reporter who promptly falls in love with the delectable Bessie.

But the girl has killed a man! Seeking evidence against the sinister head of the dope ring, she has secured a place as his secretary, and there, goaded and attacked, she has killed the fellow in desperate self-defense.

How the brother, the reporter, and a kindly old novelist set about to clear the girl from suspicion and how all ends happily in the end, forms one of the most enthralling and breath-taking mystery thrillers yet put upon the screen.

Hugh Trevor, Rita LaRoy and Ned Sparks are highlights in the splendid cast which plays in support of Miss Love.

The Metropolitan will show another of the clever Audio Revue series as well as a laugh-filled short comedy to complete an excellent program of summertime entertainment.

Psychology Lecture.

"The Psychology in Active Faith, Hope and Prayer" will be the subject of the free lecture on practical psychology to be given by Mrs. Rose Mae Ashby, psychologist, Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in the mahogany room of the Ansley hotel. The public is invited to attend.

Nancy Carroll, petite and charming, who captivated old and young with her comedienne parts in "Sweetie" and "Honey," will be seen and heard in an entirely new type of screen portrayal when she comes to the Cameo theater on Monday in "The Devil's Holiday." In this picture of modern life in America's wheat belt, Miss Carroll is the gold-digging manicurist who works hand in hand with plotting salesmen of farm implements in putting over their deals with unsuspecting farmer prospects. Miss Carroll tries her bunco game on Phillips Holmes, son of the wheat king of that region, and later regrets her shameful trickery when she discovers that he loves her.

Jack Oakie is in the leading role in "The Social Lion," the attraction for Thursday and Friday. This comedy-drama is based on the story "Marco Himself," by Octavus Roy Cohen. Mary Brian, Skeets Gallagher and Olive Borden head the supporting cast.

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED by RALPH T. JONES

Fox, Under New Management, Offers Garbo in "Romance"

Marking the inauguration of the new management at the Fox theater, with Carter Barron as the local manager, Greta Garbo in her latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer super feature, "Romance," has been chosen to launch the new screen policy.

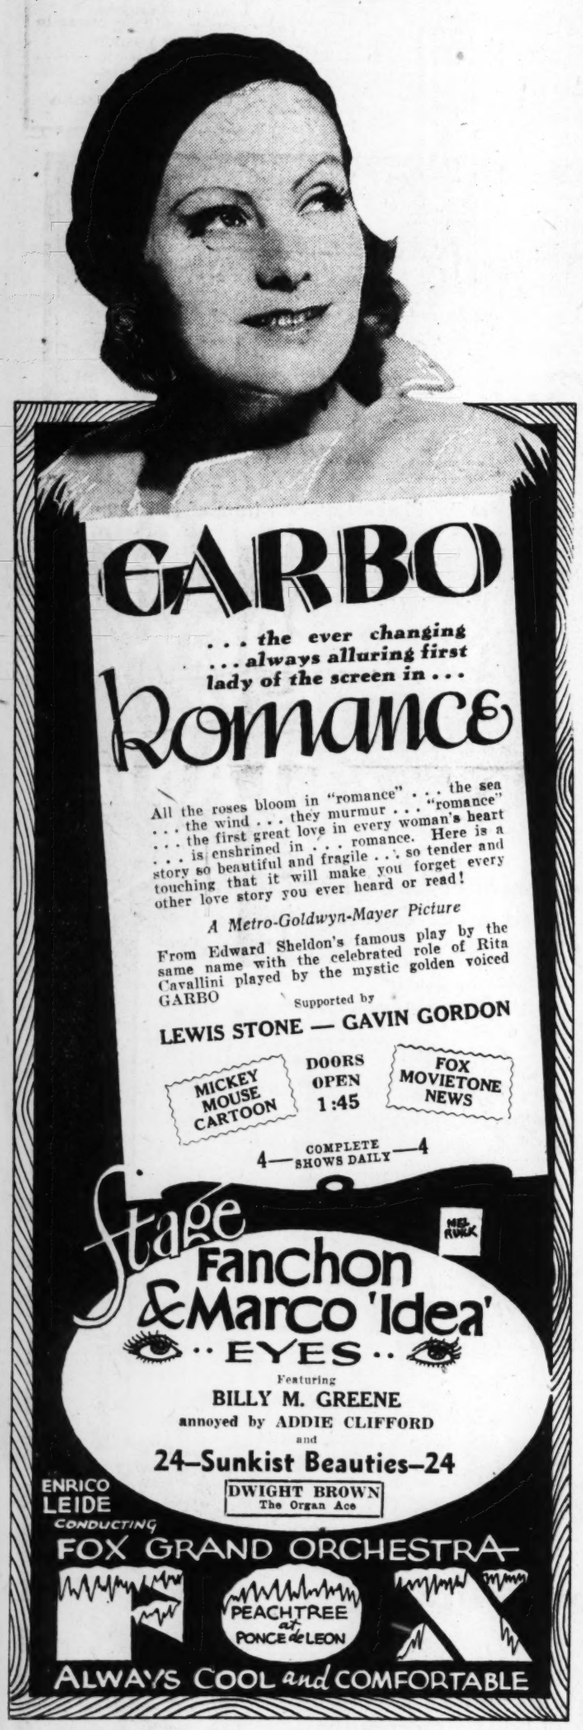

Under this management, Atlanta is assured of a constant series of outstanding triumphs of the talking screen and the selection of "Romance" for the opening program is an excellent demonstration of the truth of this announcement.

It is doubtful if the exotic star will ever surpass the beautiful work she does in "Romance." Her voice is perfectly suited to the accent of the continental opera star, the character she enacts, and she puts into her interpretation a warmth and sympathy that both charms and thrills all who see the picture.

In the supporting cast is Lewis Stone, that accomplished artist of many fine roles; Gavin Gordon, a new leading man; Elliott Nugent, Florence Lake, Clara Blandick, Henry Armetta, etc.

"Romance" is a story which has long been classed as one of the most beautiful ever written for stage or screen. It was first produced as a play with the illustrious Doris Keane in the principal role. Miss Keane later made it for the movies before they had found their voice. Now, with the lovely Garbo far surpassing anything she has done in the past—her "Anna Christie" fades into insignificance beside this later performance—it will undoubtedly rank as one of the greatest screen productions of 1930.

Shorter screen features of the week include Fox Movietone and others, while on the stage an augmented ensemble will present the Fanchon and Marco idea "Eyes." Enrico Leide and the Fox grand orchestra will play selections from "The Merry Widow" as the overture, while Mel Ruick and his stage band will, as usual, add their big quota to the entertainment.

'Eyes' Is Latest Fox Stage Show

Added Ensemble Features for Opening Week Under New Management.

The stage presentation of Fanchon and Marco, beginning at the Fox yesterday, is the "Eyes" idea. The girls, and they are many and beautiful, have been selected for the dominance of their eyes, as well as personal pulchritude.

Billy M. Greene, annoyed by Addie Clifford, an unusually funny act of clever nonsense, is the headline feature of the show.

Especially featured are the Candreva Brothers, six of them, musicians who present rendition of the sextette from "Lucia" with trumpets, accompanied by Mel Ruick's stage band. Paul Olsen, a splendid dancer, brings with him "Miss Clara Bow-zo," a dancing partner unique. Don Carroll, singing "songs you understand," has an excellent voice, and the Burroffs—Bob and Eula—are personality dancers with an unusual offering. Keo, Toki and Yoki, billed merely as "a laugh," are three clever Japs.

Mel Ruick, directing the stage band, will have his musicians on the peripatetic pit this week, and the Sunkist Beauties, always a feature with the Fanchon and Marco idea, will be augmented by a dozen of the best dancers to be found in Atlanta, these having been selected last Monday from more than a hundred tried out, and all trained carefully by Miss Eva Ross, a member of the dance staff of Fanchon and Marco, who came to Atlanta especially for this purpose. The result will be a stage literally full of beauty, grace and color when the Sunkist Beauties appear for their ensembles.

Enrico Leide, conducting the Fox Grand orchestra, is playing as the overture selections from the musical comedy, "The Merry Widow."

Cohens and Kellys On DeKalb Screen

On Monday and Tuesday the DeKalb offers Charlie Murray and George Sidney in "The Cohens and Kellys in Scotland," a screamingly funny, hilariously happy comedy. Wednesday brings William Powell and Fay Wray in "Behind the Make-up," a pulsating play of human loves and hates.

On Thursday and Friday "The Big Pond," with Maurice Chevalier and Claudette Colbert, while on Saturday Ken Maynard in "The Fighting Legion," is the attraction.

SASKATOON, Saskatchewan.—The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool country elevators in 1929 had a storage capacity almost 13 times as great as in 1925, according to figures compiled by the Saskatchewan Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited. Country elevators of the province had a capacity of 2,670,000 bushels in 1925 and 34,566,700 bushels in 1929. It is also pointed out that the capacity of the wheat pool terminals for every province is but 2,839,550 bushels more than that of the country elevators in Saskatchewan in 1929.

Cherry Pits' Amazing Value Discovered by Accident

:: CHERRY OIL INDUSTRY GROWS IN IMPORTANCE ::

STURGEON BAY, Wis., Aug. 23. (NANA)—When James G. Martin stepped a cherry pit in the local cannery some years ago and noticed the oil spot made by the smashed seed, an idea was born that today is reflected in a profitable, new cherry oil industry for Sturgeon Bay that is preventing the loss of nearly 1,000 tons of cherry pits here this year.

When spread to the nation's principal cherry raising areas in Michigan and New York, as well as Wisconsin, nearly 9,000 tons of pits annually will be utilized.

The discoveries made by Mr. Martin have seemed so important that two federal chemists have been sent here by the United States department of agriculture. They, too, have been making experiments recently, taking their cues from Mr. Martin, and they believe that the cherry oil would find a ready market if produced in large quantities.

At the time his first discovery was made Mr. Martin managed a large orchard company. In his spare time he experimented with his new idea until he eventually withdrew entirely from the fruit business to devote his whole time to the new industry and the operation of a small factory built in 1927. The factory has since been enlarged to include a refinery and is in fully working operation this season for the first time.

Not a particle of the cherry is wasted. The oil extracted from the seed is the principal and most valuable product, being sold to jobbers who in turn sell it for use in cosmetics, but the remainder of the seed is ground up for lawn and flower garden fertilizer and the shell itself will be commercially used this year for the first time as a fuel for mechanically fired furnaces.

Several other uses for the cherry pit have been discovered by Mr. Martin, but have not yet been found practical to work out commercially. The oil itself has already been made up and tried out at dinners here for salads and also has been found excellent for cooking and frying. Being non-rancid, the cherry oil is especially useful in tropical countries where common greases used in cooking spoil easily.

The meal, left after the extraction of the oil, has been found to contain 32 per cent protein, 8 per cent fat and other feeding properties beneficial as a food for dairy cattle, but in the natural state the meal is bitter, so must be altered to be made palatable enough for the cow to eat.

The same meal, if made from cherry seeds that have been thoroughly picked free of bits of the shell, has been tried out in baking cookies and cakes, being used as an addition to flour to give the delicacies an almond flavor. About 500 tons of pits will be run through at the last half of the season for this purpose, and some of the ground meal will be sent to a Milwaukee bakery concern for further experiment.

Although no large business has been worked up in the sale of the seed meal as a lawn and flower garden fertilizer, this angle of the industry is expanding sufficiently to take care of selling the supply on hand just as the shells are disposed of profitably.

Reunion Is Planned By Nisbet Family

The annual reunion of the Nisbet family will be held at Grant park next Thursday morning, and will be featured by a basket dinner which will be spread at noon, it was announced Saturday.

Robert Nisbet was a planter of Newton county, settling there shortly after the Civil War. Most of his descendants have later settled in and around Atlanta. They include the Nisbet, Cowan, McNair, Harvey, Beavers and Weldon families.

Promotion of Travel Is Tourist Body Aim

A tourist travel promotion program will be outlined to representatives from cities along the Dixie highway and the Appalachian Scenic highway at a meeting to be held in the offices of the Atlanta convention and tourist bureau next Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, it was announced Saturday.

Invitations have been sent to mayors of all towns along these routes from Chattanooga into Atlanta and south of here to Florida and from Asheville, N. C., to Atlanta. Civic clubs, chambers of commerce, hotel men and others interested in the development of tourist travel in this section also have been invited to attend.

Georgia and the southeastern states "have much to offer these tourists in scenic beauty, excellent climate and material comforts," the announcement points out, and it will be the purpose of the meeting to advertise the attractiveness of those two principal highways to Florida and thus bring the travelers along those routes.

Following the meeting a complimentary luncheon will be served at 1 o'clock at the Ansley hotel.

Miss Fillingim Weds Walter H. Gipson.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 23.—The marriage of Miss Sybil Fillingim, of Cuthbert, Ga., to Walter H. Gipson, of Montgomery, Ala., was solemnized Sunday morning, at 8:30 o'clock, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Arnold, on Adams avenue, Montgomery. The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. C. C. Anderson, the Presbyterian minister. The living room was decorated with pink roses, snapdragons and sweet peas, arranged effectively in silver baskets. Candelabra burned pink tapers. Mr. and Mrs. Gipson left immediately for a wedding trip to Cincinnati and other points in the north. They will make their home in Montgomery.

The bride wore an ensemble of chiffon velvet in midnight blue, with a blouse of ecru lace. A close-fitting hat in French model completed the costume. Her bouquet was a shoulder spray of pink roses and valley lilies. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Fillingim, of Cuthbert, Ga., and following her graduation from Andrew college in Cuthbert, she attended the Woman's college in Montgomery and took her degree at Duke University, Durham, N. C.

Mr. Gipson is well identified in business, civic and religious life in Montgomery. For two years he has been head of the Exchange Club, and is production manager for one of the large business firms of the city. He is active in the work of Trinity Presbyterian church, and is a deacon in the church.

Mrs. Bashinsky To Be Honored In Atlanta

Mrs. L. M. Bashinsky, of Troy, Ala., president general of United Daughters of the Confederacy, will be in Atlanta September 23-24, and will be given a reception by the Atlanta chapter, U. D. C., of which Mrs. Warren White is president. On September 23 the Agnes Lee chapter, U. D. C., of Decatur, will honor Mrs. Bashinsky with a tea September 24. Mrs. W. Sam Smith is president of this chapter. These social affairs will assemble members, friends and state officers of Georgia division U. D. C. to meet the distinguished honor guest.

Oconee chapter of Dublin plans an interesting course of study for the coming winter. The Confederate navy will be the subject of study. The program will be varied with the history of Confederate songs, which will be featured as solos, duets or quartets on the different programs. The program committee of the Oconee chapter is composed of Mesdames J. F. Hart, I. G. Prim, O. L. Chivers, Izzie Bashinsky and T. A. Curry, the latter being recently elected president of the Oconee chapter. The committee spent much time in plans and preparation of the program for 1930-31 and it promises to be most interesting.

The U. D. C. Chatter Box

"How far that little candle throws its beams."

It (meaning The Constitution) threw its beams all the way to Portland, Ore., in this instance, as may be seen in the following letter sent the editor:

"August 1, 1930. My dear editor of U. D. C. Chatterbox: It gave me great pleasure to read in one of your recent issues some items taken from the annual minutes, U. D. C., and I think from our own chapter report, the Robert E. Lee, No. 1888. It is a great big world we live in, and such a very small one, too. Would it interest you to know that the writer was born in Decatur and spent her girlhood in Atlanta? My brother and I were members of the Julia Jackson chapter, Children of the Confederacy, which was the first one organized, I think. You will probably know of my uncle, Dr. Arch Avary, of Atlanta, and my aunt, Mrs. John Montgomery, of Decatur.

"Forgive me for writing at such length, but I am sure that you appreciate the sentiment which prompts it. Atlanta and her people have a tender spot in my heart. Only yesterday I heard from Myrta Lockett Avary, another aunt—one of your silver-haired ladies.

"Allow me to extend you and your column greetings and good wishes from the far northwest. Cordially,
SADIE AVARY CLARKE,
(Mrs. Chas. L.)
President, Robert E. Lee chapter, U. D. C., Portland, Ore."

At the national convention the past week of the United Spanish War Veterans and auxiliaries, held in Philadelphia, and attended by more than 25,000, recognition was taken of the fact that the U. D. C. were now bestowing crosses of service on Spanish War veterans by that organization, when such veterans could show proof of service of Confederate ancestor. The president, Mrs. Lulu Shakespeare, of the state of Washington, evinced much interest in this feature while making her itinerary of the southern states recently, and expressed her gratitude to the Annie Wheeler Auxiliary, of Augusta, for initiating the movement, which met such pleasing response when presented at the U. D. C. convention in Biloxi a year ago. That the Spanish War Veterans themselves are greatly interested is proven by the fact that the Archie Butt camp, Augusta, has requested 100 blanks from chapter A, U. D. C.

A Dallas exchange declares it is up to the United Daughters of the Confederacy to take steps toward the prevention of the "desecration of 'Dixie' which has been converted into jazz, and other cheap musical (?) phases. Once in a kind of syncopated arrangement it lent inspiration to cake-walkers, and in recent times, the 'Charleston' and the 'Black Bottom' have been danced to its strains."

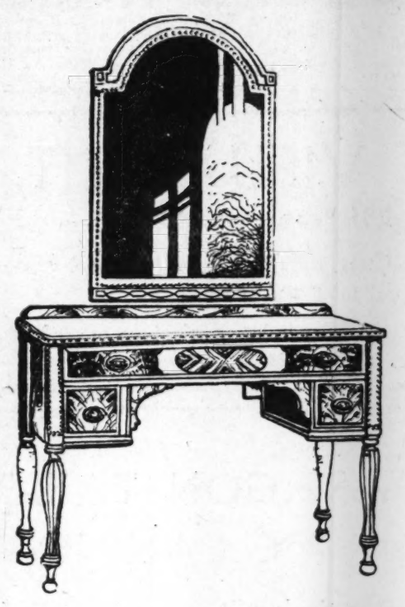

The editor recalls that during the pre-Volstead days, it was the U. D. C. that succeeded in preventing the manufacturers in sending forth certain liquid goods labeled "Robert E. Lee Rye." Now "Dixie" is a decidedly sacred institution to southern folk. In fact, many an old soldier has said his idea of heaven is a place of rest where as one relaxes, he will be regaled with the strains of "Dixie." And come to think of it, whoever heard of "The Star-Spangled Banner" or "The Red, White and Blue" dispensed, jazzily or rag-timely, by an orchestra?

Miss Anna Coleman Is Being Honored.

Miss Anna Lee Coleman, whose marriage will be solemnized Saturday, is being entertained at a number of prenuptial parties. Miss Harriett Logan entertains at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening, August 26, at her home on Williams Mill road, honoring this attractive bride-elect. Miss Ernestine Collins will be host at a luncheon at noon Wednesday, August 27, at her home on Twenty-Sixth street.

Honoring Miss Coleman, Mrs. Lane Hubbard was hostess at a shower last evening at her home on South Moreland avenue. Among those who have honored this future bride are Miss Ellen Graham and Miss Dorothy Coleman, the bride-elect's sister.

The Burns Society is a distinguished one, devoted to the keeping alive and the cherishing of the famous Scotch poet. The nomination and selecting of Mr. Graham comes as a distinct and most deserved honor, as he has for many years been one of the most enthusiastic members of the Atlanta Burns Society. Additional honor is paid him from the fact that the two delegates at large, of which he is one, were elected from the American Order of the Scottish Clans which has a membership of 25,000.

Miss Elkin Goddard Takes Leading Role.

Completely disguised by a long black moustache and wig, Miss Elkin Goddard played most impressively the role of the prosecuting attorney, 'Ima Mutt," in "The Trial of Miss Filthy McNasty," presented by the campers at Camp Parry-Dise, at Highlands, N. C., in which prominent Atlanta girls were featured in the cast. Miss Martha Gordy played the title role, and was accused of murdering a rat in cold blood, by hitting it with a mule which had a kick.

The amusing skit was cleverly carried out both in costuming and acting, and others in the cast were Miss Alberta Bell, as the judge; Miss Polly Barnwell, as the counsel for defense; Miss Elizabeth Brandt, as "Miss Notruth," witness for the state, and Miss Alice Davis, as "Miss Alltruth," witness for the defense. The verdict was returned by Miss Ruth Cotterill, foreman of the jury, who stated that the rat was killed in self-defense.

Shirley Davis Schemes To Save Money.

When 6-year-old Shirley Powers Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Davis, of Huntington road, was a wee bit younger she became obsessed with the desire to change their Buick car for a Cadillac. Her babyish calculations on how to save money so that this end might be achieved resulted in plans which were laid before her mother to this effect. The cook was to be turned off and the Davis family repair to restaurants to eat all their meals. Mrs. Davis reasoned with little Shirley, explaining that her method was much more expensive than having a cook and eating at home.

But Shirley's answer to her mother proposed that they tell the restaurants that they did not want much to eat, as they were saving money to buy a Cadillac. Mrs. Davis further objected. And Shirley, not to be outdone, joyously proposed that they take all their meals at Nana's, as it wouldn't then cost a cent. Nana is Mrs. Drury Powers, grandmother of little Shirley Davis.

Mrs. Gordon Is Subject Of Sketch in Spur.

Mrs. John B. Gordon, aged 90, is the subject of quite an interesting sketch story published in a recent issue of Spur, a magazine devoted to the smart set of the United States. The widow of General John B. Gordon, of Confederate fame, is related to and beloved by many Atlantans, among them being Mrs. Preston S. Arkwright, Mrs. George P. Howard and Alfred C. Newell. The wife of the Civil War hero, known as the man of the twelfth of May, and as the wife of the governor of this commonwealth, Mrs. Gordon reigned over the executive mansion with the charm and graciousness that were her attractive characteristics. She went to Washington, D. C., when General Gordon was United States senator and created the most favorable impression by her winsome personality and beauty, and was regarded as a brilliant hostess.

She is modern to an extreme, fairly devouring the daily newspapers, absorbing to the letter every particle of news contained therein. Spur says: "The widow of the Confederate General John Gordon was considered by many the most remarkable southern woman of her time. She followed her husband through the Civil War, setting up her tent on the outskirts of his battles, without once making a nuisance of herself—surely in itself a sufficient achievement for one woman! But not for this one. Throughout the general's long and successful political career after the war she was his closest friend and most competent adviser.

"A good story about the Gordons is one of the few told generally in the south which reveals the human characteristics of Federal soldiers. Just before the birth of her son Mrs. Gordon sent her husband off to battle, assuring him, mendaciously, that she was quite well. Returning to his home after a defeat he found an armed guard of Federal soldiers around his house. "We are here by General Grant's orders to protect General Gordon's wife from intrusion at this time," said the officer in charge. "You cannot pass." "Well, I'm just Mrs. Gordon's husband," admitted the soldier meekly, and was finally allowed to enter. Many years later "Mrs. Gordon's husband" was one of Grant's pallbearers."

Miss Mary Dodd And Mr. Worley Wed Oct. 22

The engagement is announced today of Miss Mary Collier Dodd and Sam Worley, the wedding to be solemnized Wednesday, October 22, at the First Presbyterian church on Peachtree road. The bride-elect, a slender, lovely blonde, is the younger daughter of Harry Dodd and the late Mrs. Elizabeth Collier Dodd.

Miss Dodd graduated from the Girls' High school of Atlanta and graduated from Oglethorpe University last May. She is a member of the Chi Omega fraternity, and made her debut with her sister, Miss Elizabeth Dodd, last December at a largely attended seated tea and dance at the Brookhaven Country Club.

Her father is a prominent member of the legal fraternity and holds a responsible office in the United States court. Her grandfathers are the late Richard Hayne Dodd, of Bartow county, Georgia, and George Washington Collier, a pioneer of Atlanta.

Mr. Worley is the son of F. W. Worley and the late Mrs. Rosa McColgan Worley. His forebears were pioneer settlers of Dahlonega and were prominent in religious and legal circles. Mr. Worley attended Harvard University and later graduated from the University of Georgia. At the state university in Athens he was a member of the Sigma Nu fraternity and the Cavalier Social Club. He is associated with the Atlanta Builders' Exchange and is a member of the Piedmont Driving Club.

Miss Dodd and Mr. Worley are popular members of the younger society set, and their wide circle of friends will be interested in the announcement of their approaching nuptials.

Daughter Weds On Parents' Anniversary.

The marriage yesterday of Miss Mary Emma Phillips and William Gibson Broadhurst, Jr., marked the wedding anniversary of the bride's parents, Dr. and Mrs. John Halsey Phillips, whose marriage was solemnized August 23, 1892. The marriage took place at the Union Baptist church, in Griffin, Ga., and the ceremony was performed by Rev. R. G. Walker, then of Griffin, now a prominent Baptist minister in Atlanta. Rev. Walker is an uncle of Mrs. Phillips, who was, before her marriage, Miss Mary Elizabeth Burke, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. David A. Burke, of Griffin. Dr. Phillips is the son of Dr. and Mrs. W. P. Phillips, pioneer citizens of Griffin. The wedding of Dr. and Mrs. Phillips was a brilliant social event of "the gay nineties," and they were both attended by a large number of bridesmaids and groomsmen. Among the attendants who were invited to the wedding of their daughter were Mrs. Elizabeth Fuller, Miss Sarah Patrick, Miss Mary Brooks and Mrs. W. H. Huddleston, all of Griffin; Miss Hester Walker, of Atlanta; Professor W. E. Dendy, of Atlanta, and Dr. J. B. Clark, of Eastman, Georgia.

Mr. and Mrs. Scott Plan Early Return.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Scott, Misses Virginia Crew and Amelia Donalson will soon turn their faces homeward, after enjoying for one month the delights of camp life at Valley Ranch, Wyoming. Mr. and Mrs. Scott hold the record thus far of catching 23 fish in two hours. They have enjoyed trout fishing, cloudbursts and the excitement of seeing Indians and cowboys ride the wildest of ponies during their visit to the far west. Photographs have reached Atlanta showing these Atlantans in khaki and Indian uniforms, with colorful Navajo blankets hung on the railing surrounding the porch of the home in which they dwelled.

Uninvited Guest Attends Wedding.

A prominent Atlanta man was riding home with a friend recently and passed a North Side church in which a fashionable afternoon wedding was taking place. "You may let me out right here," he said to his friend, "as I can go home with my family from the wedding and you won't have to go so far out of your way." He entered the church and was ushered to the front section reserved for the family, as the rear seats were all occupied. Smiling and bowing in his genial manner, he scrutinized the church for members of his family, but they were nowhere to be seen. After the marriage ceremony he searched everywhere for them, inquiring of all members of the bride's and groom's families if they had seen his "folks." After making his way home on a crowded street car, imagine his surprise when his wife informed him that not a single member of the family had been invited to the wedding, and he had done what is generally known as "crashing the gates," without knowing it.

Atlantans Visit Colorful Spain.

Misses Frances Woodberry and Dorothy Barclay, who returned last week from a summer spent in Europe, give glowing accounts of their travels abroad. According to these widely traveled Atlantans, they were vividly impressed with their stay in Spain, where a greater part of their stay was spent. Their description of the magnificent Alahambra, viewed by moonlight, literally transports their listeners to this fascinating country of romance and color. So alluring did Granada and Sevilla prove that each claimed several additional days of the carefully planned schedule of the two companion travelers, who motored from the former Spanish city to Algeciras. At this point they ferried to Gibraltar, from where they sailed for Italy. Making Naples their first stop, the Atlantans traveled the entire length of this Latin country, which rivals the beauty and charm of Spain. Their last weeks abroad were spent in Austria, Germany and France, the chateau section of the latter being covered by a large French motor car in which the Atlantans were passengers. Before embarking on the liner Statendam for their return voyage, Misses Woodberry and Barclay visited England and Scotland, where innumerable trips along the picturesque countryside of these two English-speaking countries were enjoyed.

The establishment of regular dates for matinees, featuring pictures and vaudeville suitable for young people, has long been a cherished product of the Better Films Committee, and plans to achieve this end are being perfected by the committee, headed by Mrs. Irving Thomas, Mrs. Frank McCormack and Mrs. Louis Elsas. The importance of making more and better films for children and junior members was stressed by Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, of the city board of review, in her address before the theater owners at their recent gathering in the city.

The workshop plans to give four productions this season, two full length plays and two playbills of one-act plays and curtain raisers. The fact that all plays produced are the original work of Atlanta writers who are members of the workshop's playwriting group makes each performance a premiere which will afford much pleasure. In this presentation of wholly original work the productions offer a distinctive and unique development in theater which is not to be had outside the largest cities. Each production will be in the hands of highly talented and experienced directors who will spare no pains to offer a finely mounted, timed and directed performance.

Miss Laney, of Jackson, Ga., To Wed Rev. Burkett Aug. 30

JACKSON, Ga., Aug. 23.—Widespread interest centers in the announcement made today of the engagement of Miss Margueritte Laney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Roscoe Laney, of Jackson, and Rev. Herman James Burkett, of Jackson, Tenn., whose marriage will be solemnized at 7:30 o'clock Saturday evening, August 30, in the theology chapel of Emory University. The ceremony will be performed by Dr. Franklin N. Parker in the presence of the immediate families and close friends.

The bride-to-be was honor graduate of Locust Grove institute in 1926 and later she attended LaGrange college, where she was a member of the Kappa Delta sorority. She completed her education at the University of Georgia. For two years Miss Laney taught school and recently she has identified herself with personnel workers in Atlanta, having made a wide circle of friends in both the business and educational fields. She is the sister of Miss Sara Helen Laney and George Truman Laney, of Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. Burkett, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Burkett, of Creathersville, Mo., is a graduate of Lambuth college, Jackson, Tenn., and was prominent in all the college activities, being president of Sigma Alpha fraternity, president of the organization of young ministers and a member of the student advisory council. He was also prominent in athletics, having played quarterback on the football team for four years. For the past few months Rev. Burkett has been doing graduate work at Emory University. After the wedding Saturday evening the popular young couple will leave for a trip to points of interest in Alabama, Tennessee and Missouri before returning to their home in Jackson, Tenn.

State and National P.-T. A. News Issued by Publicity Chairman

The following article is issued from the publicity office of the Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers by Mrs. H. G. Parks, chairman: Officers of local associations are reminded that in order to receive the ten copies of the September Bulletin offered by the state to all affiliated units, names of officers and chairmen must be sent immediately to the state office at McDonough. Correct initials, street and house number in city, postoffice and route number if rural, are necessary if the Bulletin is to reach the desired destination. Lack of proper address has caused failure in receiving state material. In order to become familiar with the type of service offered by the state, and to learn what is expected of the locals, it is important that all officers and chairmen of districts, councils and locals receive the Bulletin regularly.

The central objective of the Georgia congress for the year 1930-31 is parent education. More and more parent education is being recognized as an urgent necessity. The Georgia congress with 45,529 members in 561 associations, offers an opportunity for the advancement of the parent education movement, and ultimately service to the children of the state, unequaled by any other organization. The very nature and intent of parent education demands that every Parent-Teacher Association emphasize this phase of work. Write to Miss Martha McAlpine, agricultural college, Athens, for information on parent education study groups. A book on the subject may be obtained from the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, 1201 Sixteenth street, N. W., Washington, D. C., for the price of $1.

Mrs. W. V. Kingdon, 1102 Springdale road, N. E., Atlanta. Birney gavel chairman, reminds all associations that she still has a supply of gavels. The Birney gavel is significant to the P-T. A., being made from the tree under which Alice McClellan Birney, founder of the organization, played as a child. The price of the gavel is $5.

Miss Thomasma Retires From Camp Fire Work.

Camp Fire Girls throughout the south will learn with regret of the retirement from Camp Fire work of Miss Margaret Thomasma, Atlanta Camp Fire executive and associate field secretary for nine southern states. At the conclusion of Camp Toccoa, Atlanta Camp Fire Girls' camp, on August 11, she sent in her resignation, effective immediately. Miss Thomasma's administration of Camp Fire activities in the Atlanta district for the past year has been signally successful. Membership has more than tripled, as well as work being greatly increased throughout the entire southeast. For the past year she has been in charge of the work here, including the directorship of Camp Toccoa, and the season just closed has been pronounced by far the most successful ever held there.

Miss Thomasma began Camp Fire work in 1921 as guardian, or head of a neighborhood unit, in Grand Rapids, Mich., her home. This work was purely voluntary. She was a guardian for two years when she was made executive of the Grand Rapids organization. During this time she directed Camp Fire camp on Lake Michigan.

In 1925, she joined the staff of the national Camp Fire organization and during the summer of that year visited 30 states over the country, giving training courses to guardians and executives. She was at this work for two years.

In 1928, Miss Thomasma was sent to New England as field executive for that section of the country. During these two years she directed a camp of 350 children in addition to her other work. For one year she was financial secretary of the Boston Camp Fire organization. She came to Atlanta where her work, from the Camp Fire standpoint, has reached monumental proportions.

Miss Thomasma received her training in camping at Columbia University, New York, under Dr. E. K. Fretwell, Fay Welch and Dr. William Vinal. In the fortnight before she leaves for Grand Rapids, she is the guest of Mrs. Elenore Raoul Green, at the latter's estate at Highlands, N. C.

State W. C. T. U. Editor Gives Quotations From Macon Meeting

BY M. FRANCES M. BURGHARD, of Macon, Editor

"Life is one election after another," complains a correspondent, "so many that it is difficult to keep up with those in other states. We will be grateful if you will tell in your column, whether the nominations so far indicate the 'wet' revolt freely predicted during the Literary Digest poll."

In compliance with the above request, I will quote briefly from a talk made at the Macon W. C. T. U. meeting last Friday when Mrs. Walter D. Domingoes spoke on "The Relation of Temperance and Missions and Needed Co-operation." Mrs. Joseph Howard gave the devotionals. Miss Margaret Taylor read, "Something and Nothing," Donovan Jones sang "Gloria," by Buvvi-Peccia, accompanied by Miss Minnie Lee Rankin. Miss Julia Goodall led in singing W. C. T. U. songs, and Rev. Stephen A. Baker offered the opening and Mrs. Charles R. Jenkins, the closing players.

I stated in my talk that so far the primaries have not indicated a change in the relative strength of the wets and drys in the next congress, and that this one was overwhelmingly dry. That three attempts to undo state prohibition through referenda have completely collapsed in California, Colorado and North Dakota. In Texas, Senator Morris Sheppard, author of the eighteenth amendment, without making a single campaign speech, but remaining on his job in Washington, was renominated with more votes than both his wet opponents.

And that was not all, in Texas, Frank Putnam, who ran for governor on a straight-out pledge to ask the legislature to repeal the state enforcement act—Mr. Putnam, wet candidate for governor, who promised to empty the jails of all liquor violators, ran tenth, with 2,350 votes out of 600,000. No wonder that the Dallas (Texas) News said: "One of the strangest things in the world is how unpopular prohibition is and how hard it is for an anti to get elected."

In Indiana every dry congressman was renominated. In Illinois, Mrs. McCormick won after announcing herself to be personally and politically dry. In Florida, Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen defeated her wet opponent by more than 30,000 majority. Mr. Morrow's nomination in New Jersey does not add a single new vote to the wet side in congress. New Jersey has ever been wet. That militant prohibitionist, Clifford Pinchot, was nominated in Pennsylvania. He defeated not only the candidates of the rabid wets, but the candidate of the powerful political machine, and brought "back into public life one of the most fearless crusaders for political righteousness that our times have produced," according to Stanley High, editor of the Christian Herald.

Professional wets from New York have been badgering North Dakota for three years. Once more they failed completely and there was little said about their failure. Had a wet gone to congress from North Dakota the news would have startled readers around the world!

These are primary results despite the fact that voters were daily editorialized, cartooned and reported that the country was in revolt against prohibition. I called attention to the fact that many distinguished bodies of influential citizens, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, with its 3,000,000 membership; the National Education Association, with its 200,000 teachers; the Parent-Teacher Association, and the Protestant churches with their large memberships, virtually all of whom went on record this summer with strong declarations in favor of the prohibition law and its support. Even the Literary Digest poll showed that the educators, bankers and preachers were dry. So the drys with the brains, money and religion of the country on their side are pretty well armed.

Edison on the W. C. T. U.

Thomas A. Edison, whose wife is an earnest worker in the W. C. T. U., said of the organization: "Prohibition must be supported by organized women. They made a big contribution to winning it. Eternal vigilance on their part is necessary to victory over its enemies. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union must continue to increase its membership and strengthen its efficiency. It must be the medium through which positive facts of prohibition reach the homes of America and temperance women in other lands. It must be on guard to prevent any weakening in the enforcement features of the national prohibition law.

"They have made good on one of the most colossal tasks ever undertaken in the history of social reform—ask the ex-saloon keeper! They have united the women of all creeds in the common social tasks which are the concern of all. They advocate the highest type of education in our public schools, so that the scholars may have a well-rounded view of life—ask the teacher! They have stood as a bulwark against corruption and incompetence in government, both local and national—ask the politician! They have fought against the sale of narcotics which are sapping the life of thousands. They have given every woman in America a chance to help in the task of cleaning up the life of the nation—ask any one of the 700,000 who have already joined! They have undertaken to carry to all the world the great blessings which have come to our own country through prohibition and the constructive program upon which they have been working. They are loyal to the church of Jesus Christ in every good work carried on by that institution.

"Every local union is a selling agency for law observance in its own community. Every member obeys the law, showing the world where she stands by wearing her white bow. Every meeting, public, social or regular, emphasizes the temperance question. Every local union makes a contribution to the support of law enforcement in its community. Our women are not local law enforcement officers. It is not their business to seek out the evidences of the violation of the law. It is their business to build the public sentiment that will support officials in the performance of their duties. These officers should have the same co-operation in the detection of violators of the prohibition law as of other laws." Mr. Edison ended by asking a pertinent question and stating other facts. He said: "Isn't this the kind of organization to which you would like to belong? You are needed. You are wanted. Be one to help finish the task."

State P.-T. A. President's Message Today Emphasizes Double Duty

Mrs. R. H. Hankinson, president of the Georgia congress, Parents and Teachers, issues the following message today in which she emphasizes the double duty of this worthy organization:

"In order that the state of Georgia, the cradle of the Parent-Teacher movement, shall show due appreciation of the vision and zeal of the founder of the organization, materially as well as spiritually, it is the hope of this administration that every association will recognize a double duty, and do it—first, that of devoting very early in the year one meeting to making the association 100 per cent in membership, an organization in which every child is represented; and second, that of extending the services of the Congress of Parents and Teachers into some school that has not had the advantage of such support of its patrons. The second idea, that of helping some one else, is the superstructure the organization seeks to build over the more selfish foundation. It is the real missionary spirit necessary to the spread of the P.-T. A. gospel.

Another Obligation.

"There is a third gesture that, just at this juncture, would prove marvelously helpful. It happens that an obligation is due the printers of our splendid food book, a project of an earlier administration. This obligation must, in honor, be met. It would be a fine thing if the teachers of the state, in appreciation of the previous marked contributions of the organization to their success and the success of the schools would observe an appreciation day and in some way, perhaps from the sale of articles that would otherwise serve no purpose, contribute to the liquidation of this obligation. Dr. Willis A. Sutton has suggested the sale of coat hangers and tooth paste tubes and promises heartiest co-operation. Another superintendent might see another earning opportunity, equally as good, and more suitable to his locality.

Rally Day.

"Dr. Sutton has suggested October 12 as the rally day. May we not fall in line, city and county superintendents alike, high school, grade and rural associations and teachers, and adjust this seeming difficulty? If we can see through this obstacle to the glory of united effort for a common cause, if we can anticipate the joy of achievement in a game that must necessarily release energy for the accomplishment of things pressing and needful for the advancement and progress of the children, we will have had our first real vision of the goal of the organization.

"Soon this plan will officially be set in motion. Every grade mother and every thrift chairman will be called upon to do full duty. With every school and every association recognizing an obligation the result will be just what we would wish. Personally, what will be the result according to you? The president would like to hear from state associations that will help to make a success of this venture."

By Lady Charles Arnold

In a collection of old prints cherished by my family is this picture — it shows a gentleman seeking the hand of a young lady of fashion — she is saying something to this effect: "Can you support me in the manner to which I am accustomed?"

Transport this scene to Atlanta — and — with Regenstein's Peachtree store in mind — the gentleman may readily say "Yes!!"

In this lovely store I find fashion correctly portrayed and — at so reasonable a figure that every woman may dress excellently — and no husband will frown at the charge!!

Distinguished Army Couple Are Co-Authors Of Popular and Modern Mystery Stories

Colonel Raymond S. Bamberger, U. S. A., and Mrs. Bamberger, who have recently arrived in Atlanta, where Colonel Bamberger is on duty at Fort McPherson. They are co-authors of modern mystery stories and their latest work, "Murder at Red Pass," will be published September 15.

BY IDA FRANCES WING.

Being more than a bit perturbed upon ringing the bell of the smart apartment out Ansley Park way which housed Colonel Raymond S. Bamberger and Mrs. Bamberger and wondering just how to approach my subject and what I would say and whether the going would be pleasant or painful, in the midst of my trepidation, the door was opened by a correct maid.

"Is Mrs. Bamberger in?" I questioned.

Whereupon a graceful, slender person in a modish black frock appeared in the door of the living room and in the most cordial manner made us welcome. Over a friendly cigaret she chatted entertainingly of her books, her enjoyment in writing the mystery stories in collaboration with her husband, Colonel Bamberger, of her tall son, Thomas, who is a cadet at a military school, and of the places she has traveled and the interesting people she has met. While she talked her large, expressive, brown eyes twinkled with amusement at some amusing bit and grew grave over more serious things and her hands expressed her different meanings in a graceful wave. Her interest in what other people are doing, her freshness of viewpoint and modern outlook coupled with a rare dignity are no small part of her charm. Her living room also reflects this talented couple, for there are tall book shelves lined with books, treasured photographs of friends, a most business-like typewriter with papers in orderly piles (thus belying my pet theory that all authors were engulfed in a sea of papers), pieces of brocade and teakwood and an amusing collection of diminutive brass animals, a pet hobby of our authors.

Vital Type.

Mrs. Bamberger is such a vital type of person with a versatile personality. Small wonder she has earned three pen names and writes three different types of stories with ease. In midsummer, writing under the name of Helen Berger, she released "The Mystery of World's End," a perfectly corking mystery story for girls and boys. Back in 1919 she wrote under the name of Rose Sidney, "Grapes of the San Jacinto," which was published in the Pictorial Review and three starred in O'Brien's collection of that year. The following year "Butterflies" was published in the Pictorial Review, bearing the name of Rose Sidney, and was republished in the O'Brien and O'Henry collections and in "Thrice Told Tales," compiled by Blanche Colton Williams. Later this story was made into a play by Thomas W. Broadhurst and produced at the Grand Guinol in 1927.

The mystery stories, which are the work of both the Bambergers, are published under the name of The Aresbys and are gripping, thrilling novels with conclusive evidence leading up to unexpected endings. Their latest work will be released in mid-September and it is named "Murder at Red Pass," with Ives Washburn, as publisher. It has to do with two murders which occur in a moving picture company on location in Hawaii. One of the murders occurs at the time-honored "Sacrificial Rock," where in ages past the Hawaiians did obeisance to their gods. "The Red Pass" is a pass or trail high in the mountain range on the island of Oahu. Other mystery stories written in collaboration by Colonel Bamberger and Mrs. Bamberger are "Who Killed Coralie?" with the scene laid in San Francisco, and "The Mark of the Dead," a plot laid in Hawaii, where an old cottage built on a bit of land where huge breakers wash upward on grey rocks and high cliffs rise skyward provided a perfect setting for this thrilling story.

Intrepid Officer.

Colonel Bamberger is a distinguished member of the United States army, who was one of that group of intrepid officers who were pioneers in the air service. He served in the calvary when he was commissioned as a lieutenant and later transferred to the flying branch of the service. In 1922 he was appointed as an officer of the adjutant general's department and has remained in that department until the present time, having been detailed as assistant adjutant general of the fourth corps area with station at Fort McPherson.

Both Colonel Bamberger and Mrs. Bamberger are interesting additions to the social and literary circles of Atlanta and Fort McPherson and are enjoying a wide popularity.

The minutes of the morning flew by. The time was up. I had interviewed an author and adored it!

Women Voters Will Conduct Class Aug. 27

A class in parliamentary usage will be conducted in Hall No. 2 of the Chamber of Commerce Wednesday, August 27, beginning at 10:30 o'clock, with Mrs. J. W. Wills, parliamentarian for the League of Women Voters, as leader. Members of the league have formed the habit of looking forward with keen anticipation to the parliamentary class which is a part of the league's annual program.

Mrs. Hamilton Douglass and Miss Rosa Woodberry, experts in the such matters, have conducted the classes in the past and those who have taken advantage of these opportunities to add to their knowledge of parliamentary usage have been fully repaid.

Members of the league, especially the ward chairmen and other officers, are urged to attend the class and to bring their notebooks so as to be prepared to take the outlines and fundamentals which Mrs. Wills is planning to give to the class. Interested women, whether members of the league or not, are invited to attend and take part in the drill which will follow the outline.

The League of Women Voters, organized to carry on the uncompleted work of the suffrage organizations, will celebrate Tuesday, August 26, the tenth anniversary of the actual day that Secretary Colby issued a proclamation which enfranchised the women of the United States. Davison-Paxon will compliment the board of the Atlanta league with a luncheon at 12:30 o'clock in a private dining room. Women who took part in the campaign for votes for women will attend and tell their personal experiences and Mrs. W. F. Trenary, vice president of the Atlanta league, will preside. A program has been prepared which will include how Tennessee ratified the nineteenth amendment; what the Georgia legislature did with the amendment; how the city democratic executive committee gave the women of Atlanta the right to vote in the city primary, one year before the women of the country were enfranchised.

Miss Brooks and Mr. King Wed At Church Ceremony in Columbus

COLUMBUS, Ga., Aug. 23.—The wedding of Miss Martha Rogers Brooks and Ralph Irwin King was solemnized Tuesday evening at St. Luke's Methodist church. Rev. Reid Smith officiated in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends. A program of prenuptial music was rendered by Professor Louis Chase on the organ, and preceding the entrance of the bridal party Miss Sara Dimon sang "Because."

The ushers were Dr. W. Herman Brooks, of Augusta, brother of the bride; George King and Forbes Bradley, and the groomsmen included Dr. Thomas G. Brooks, of Aiken, S. C., and Madden Hatcher and A. F. Allen. The bridesmaids were Misses Mary Elizabeth Tune, Sue Mac Fox and Alice Kelly, of Mathews, Ga. Miss Tune and Miss Fox wore gowns of daffodil yellow chiffon made with fashionable short waist and long flared skirts. Completing their costumes were yellow slippers and hats, and colonial bouquets of asters, roses, buddleia, baby's breath. Miss Kelly's gown was of green chiffon, fashioned similar to those of the other maids, and she also carried a colonial bouquet.

Mrs. J. H. McMurria, sister of the bride, was her matron of honor. She was very lovely wearing an exquisite gown of nile green brocaded satin in dull finish. It was made with natural waistline and draped skirt, which formed a train. She carried an arm bouquet of pink roses and swainsona. Little Miss Bayne Gibson, of Decatur, was flower girl and wore a frock of green chiffon and carried a basket of rose petals. Jimmy King, nephew of the groom, was the ring-bearer, and wore a white satin suit and carried the rings for the double ceremony in the heart of a lily.

The radiantly lovely young bride entered with her brother, John Reese Brooks, Jr., of Jacksonville, and was met at the altar by the groom and his best man. The blonde beauty of the bride was enhanced by her gown of ivory satin made with yoke and tiny pull sleeves of duchess lace. The close-fitting skirt hung in ripples to the floor. Her voluminous tulle veil was caught to her head with orange blossoms and pearls. She carried a shower bouquet of valley lilies.

Mr. and Mrs. McMurria entertained with a wedding supper at the Country Club, having as their guests the members of the wedding party, out-of-town guests and a number of friends. The bride's table was overlaid with a lace cloth and in the center was a silver bowl of roses, physostegia and asters. Encircling this were silver candlesticks in which burned slim green tapers. A bride's cake embossed in valley lilies and topped with a miniature bride and groom was placed at one end and at the other was a miniature bride dressed in satin and flowing tulle veil and surrounded by her wedding party.

Mr. and Mrs. King left for their wedding trip to the mountains of North Carolina.

Mrs. King is the daughter of Mrs. John Reese Brooks, of Agricola and Columbus, and of the late Dr. Brooks, a noted and well-beloved physician and peach grower. She is a very beautiful and charming young girl and since coming to Columbus to live with her sister, Mrs. McMurria, has endeared herself to a wide circle of friends. Mr. King is a prominent businessman of Columbus.

A Decade of Votes for Women

By William Hard

Author of "Who's Hoover?"

A DECADE of woman's suffrage has not, it is true, changed the basic nature of man or the basic nature of woman or the basic nature of the relations between the sexes. Men continue to supply the overwhelming bulk of outward political origination and of outward political leadership. Those who expected a constitutional amendment to produce a biological revolution may experience a certain degree of disappointment. Those, on the other hand, who regarded the Nineteenth Amendment as only one more means whereby women within their nature may more amply co-operate with men within theirs, and whereby the limits of both may be jointly transcended toward a more vigorous and more effective society, have much reason for satisfaction and for encouragement when measuring the results of the last ten years.

The benefits of woman suffrage are not to be sought in the deeds of exceptional women. They are not to be demonstrated or disproved by a count of women celebrities. It is fairly notorious that letting women play on the piano has not yet produced a woman Beethoven, and that letting them go into business has not yet produced a woman Ford, and that letting them read and write has not yet produced a woman Shakespeare. Those facts would not justify the lunacy of concluding that women who are proficient in music and women who can support themselves and women who can read a letter and write one back have worked no change in the amenities and in the stabilities of life. Similarly, the fact that letting women vote has not yet produced a Disraeli or a Roosevelt provides no ground whatsoever for the idea that the consequences of woman's suffrage are either nil or negligible. For the search for most of the influence of women must still continue, in politics as even in home building, to go beneath the surface. The overwhelming bulk of the designing and of the constructing of homes is done by men. The literate, accomplished, exacting American woman talks much nevertheless with the architects and the engineers before they embark on their endeavors. In the superiority of the American average residence to the average residence elsewhere in the world, there is as much the demand by the women as the execution by the men; and the intelligence of that demand could not exist except through the willingness of American society to concede to the American woman every amplitude of individual, independent personality.

To put it at its extreme and with no allowance for multitudinous exceptional instances, woman basically is demand and man basically is supply. That eternal and irrepealable rule is as operative in politics as in any other branch of human activity.

The other night in a city long familiar to me I attended a meeting of the county committee of a major national political party. By a common contemporary custom the membership of the committee was half of men and half of women. This custom, which now is widely followed all the way from the lowest local committees of parties to the topmost national ones, from a certain point of view is wholly unreasonable. If we were considering political merit and skill entirely in and for themselves, we surely would not say that at the national convention of our parties each state delegation must elect one man and one woman to the party's national committee, irrespective of the fact that the party's two most expert party politicians in the state might be both male—or, for that matter, both female. Nevertheless, the general equal division of party committees today between male and female, and the arbitrary transformation of them thus into so many political Noah's arks for the saving and diffusing of American political life, is practically soundly conceived and is beyond all doubt the most important feature of American woman suffrage in actual technical method.

The purpose of it, superficially considered, was unscrupulous flattery of the women. The deeper instinctive purpose of it was a more rapid spreading of political information and of political interest among the women. The unintended effect of it has been that men political leaders, almost everywhere in the country and at all levels of the committee hierarchy of each political party, have been increasingly obliged to carry along with them the judgments of women as well as the judgments of men in the choice of party policies.

The men, it should be frankly repeated, do usually the first guessing at policies. Ruth Pratt, congresswoman from New York city, last year made one of the best speeches ever made in the federal house of representatives against the sugar tariff. She made it, though, in full harmony with prior male sentiment in her locality. Urban New York recently has seen no reason at all why it should favor beet sugar growers in Utah, where its interests are small, at the expense of cane-sugar growers in Cuba, where its investments are stupendous. Women do not live in a sex—they live in a locality; and their votes on sectional issues are seldom treason to their own sections.

Ruth Owen, congresswoman from Florida, this year cast a democratic vote in the house of representatives for the republican tariff bill. In doing so, however, she did nothing peculiar or originative. Her three men colleagues in the house of representatives from Florida voted for the bill too. The men growers of Florida products are protectionists. Ruth Owen is as smart as any wearer of the trousers on Capitol Hill, and she is far too smart to run up the flag of her sex against her state.

Ruth McCormick, congresswoman from Illinois, was a valorous and glamorous champion of the "equalization fee" in the hottest and highest days of McNary-Haugenism. She is as canny and cagy and as strong and as straight in her wagings of the wars of politics as any man extant. Just the same, she never did, and (I venture to say) never could, herself think up an idea like the "equalization fee." For that exploration of the reeling realm of economic higher mathematics there was needed first the roving runaway masculine mind of Mr. George Peek.

Consistently the idea which has succeeded the "equalization fee" as the reigning ingenuity of "farm relief"—namely, the "export debenture"—had to be adumbrated for its feminine followers by the tinkering male inventiveness of Mr. Charles Leslie Stewart.

Of all the new salvations or new trenzies which have flitted across the political skies in the last ten years and which have been tamed into permanent planets or lost into the vast void of transitory comets, it would be difficult to attribute even one, of any magnitude, to woman's suffrage. The fundamental principles of all contemporary legislation were thoroughly known and thoroughly developed before the Nineteenth Amendment was proclaimed.

Federal prohibition, that alleged crowning glory of federal woman's suffrage, cannot be permitted to glorify or to disparage it. Federal prohibition preceded federal woman's suffrage. The peak of prohibitory enforcement enthusiasm—the "five and ten" law—occurred during federal woman's suffrage, but it was contrived by male zeal and properly bore the name not of any woman but of Mr. Wesley L. Jones. Not one of the eight women in the federal house of representatives can for a moment aspire to equal the prohibitory ardency of such male members as Mr. Louis C. Cramton. The wets among those eight women are determined wets and the drys among them are for the most part fairly indeterminate and unbelligent "drys." Nobody can look at the dry cause in the congress and fail to perceive that the fanning of its flame there is still done supremely and dominantly by the men.

That cause nevertheless precisely illustrates the value which I have made bold to urge as the chief value of woman's suffrage: the breaking down of factitious barriers between the courses of thought of the sexes and the mingling of those courses in channels dictated not by a supposed sex-conflict but by the noted needs of a locality or of a party or of a general social group.

The county committee meeting to which I alluded some moments ago was a normal illustration of the working of this process. There could be observed in it, as in thousands of similar meetings in any given current year nowadays, in all parts of the country, the new developments which both enlarge the influence of women and strip it of mythological assumptions.

The scenic surroundings of the meeting were a vast improvement upon those which in the purely masculine days gone by had always—within my recollection—inspired the committee's labors. There was little or no resort, for instance, to neighboring bars for refreshment of eloquence. The bars were abundantly adjacent, and were busily engaged in speaking easily even in the midst of the hush-hush of supposed prohibitory extinction. They were not speaking at all, however, to the gentlemen who were occupied in being the meeting's managers or—for that matter—to the gentlemen who on the floor of the hall were occupied in being at their nicest and best to the "lady committee women" from their precincts. The atmosphere was one of gallant, even if exhausting, decorum.

It also was one of nobly attempted argumentative performance. Gone were the intellectually painless methods of the heroic age, when from the sawdusty floor a multitudinously inebriated babble would cut short the chairman's efforts to read his proposed contribution to the eternal principles of the approaching county convention, and when the unsolicited approval of the meeting would instantly follow his exordium of "Gentlemen!" with definite cries of "We're with you, Joe." The remainder of the evening could then be devoted to the playing of pinochle.

Those burly and brisk methods of arriving at a discovery of party opinion had been discarded in favor of prolonged elucidations of all points involved in disputed local party policies. Most of the elucidations, as is usual in such meetings in so far as they have come under my wandering journalistic eye, were by the men. The most attentive listening—as is also, I have noticed, usual—was by the women. At the end of the evening deliberate votes were taken and the views of the elected representatives of the rank-and-file voters of that party in that county were genuinely ascertained.

It is in such gatherings, at all levels of our party life, that the widening of feminine influence in our politics goes organically forward without much notice from the non-political observers who concentrate their gaze on famous women office-holders as upon stars in a movie. It is not, in politics, the feminine stars that are changing the tone of the play. They are too few. The change is getting gradually and almost silently consummated by the masses of women, who little by little, and more and more are subjecting American party organizations (just as they subjected American mining camps) to the appellate if not the originative, judgment of the home.

Women never made mining camps. They made them better. That is the mass truth, when all the entertaining stories about exceptional men and exceptional women have been told to the finish. It is again so in politics.

The transformation of a mining camp into a home town, while giving it women, gives it (happily) real ones, not mythical ones. Woman's suffrage incidentally but most importantly is performing a smiliar service for the politics of issues as well as for the politics of organizations and of offices. At the county meeting the deliberations which I have sketchily narrated, a vote was taken on "wet" and "dry." Speeches leading up to it had been painstakingly made—on both sides of the question—by controversial and protracted male speakers. The outcome of the vote at the end of the evening was overwhelmingly wet, with actually a larger proportion of the women voting that way than the men. The community was wet—its experience with prohibition had been unfortunate. Regulated saloons had given way, simply, to unregulated speakeasies.

Gone—or at any rate, fast going—are the intimidating and perverting generalizations: "The women are for the League; "the women are against the navy"; "the women are dry"; "the women are for a federal department of education." Woman's suffrage has demonstrated the otherwise absolutely unadmitted fact that some women are, and some women are not. The propaganda of a one-sided feministic menace is undermined and is falling. It is from this point of view that a sweet but realistic and very southern and very conservative lady has sagely assured me: "Well, anyway, woman's suffrage is better than what we had before it—woman agitation."

Over against these benefits of woman's suffrage, which seem to me clear today and destined to be clearer and larger tomorrow, I place a defect which I hope will some day be removed. I hope that some day women political workers will be more insistent upon genuine outstanding recognition of their fellow women of proved service to their parties.

Three of the eight "gentlewomen" of the house of representatives—as Mr. Speaker Longworth calls the lot of them—I do not have the felicity of knowing. The remaining five, as I have thoroughly learned from actual practical comparisons, can give a political reporter as much solid, shrewd election wisdom as he can glean from any five of their men colleagues. The "Three Ruths" and Florence Kahn and Edith Nourse Rogers need not be called able "for women." They are wholly equal to men in penetration of the actualities of politics. Let it be granted that men continue to be the main inventors of issues, good and bad. My theme at this point is not issues, but practical electoral operations. In that field throughout the country women are abundantly showing high skill—and sometimes genius—as undeniable as that of any of their men competitors.

The recognition they are receiving at the top is tardy. I pass over the touted little lists of women who are in city councils and in state legislatures and at the heads of bureaus and of subbureaus in the federal government at Washington. I am more impressed by the fact that for the most part in the supreme management of the national committees of our parties it is still expected that women shall, as it were, be a busy altar guild and do plenty of chores without being admitted to the truly operative inward deliberations of the vestry.

Women, instead of being too aggressive on behalf of their sex, have turned out to be, I think, too meek. At the end of ten years of woman's suffrage I should say in final comment upon it that it has given to practical politics much benefit from the revealed judgments and the revealed discriminations of women in mass, but not yet as much benefit as is possible from the individual talents of women in special, individual instances of supreme ability.

BUDDIE AND HIS FRIENDS

'Whale Oil Gus' Spins Riotous Yarn

Famous Nantucket Veteran, With His "Man Friday" Whose Name Is Monday, Regales With Accounts of Cannibals, Mutinies, Moby Dicks That Made N. E. Adventure Seven Decades Ago

"Been tossed in the air 64 times by the flip of a whale's tail," says Captain Folger. Here is an old American print showing how it was done.

BY JOHN T. BRADY

CLOSE to my nose, too close for comfort, he brandished a long, murderous-looking knife.

Like a refreshing zephyr of salt air from the ocean on a hot day he had "blown" into the office with that rolling gait that always betrays the deep-sea sailor.

Well dressed in an officer's suit of blue with brass buttons, he was, and on his head he wore a jaunty cap labelled "Captain" with a true seaman's tilt.

"I'm Captain Augustus E. Folger, 'Whale Oil Gus' for short," he had announced with characteristic bluntness. "Son of a sea captain and whale hunter, and grandson of a sea captain and whale hunter. Born on the island of Nantucket, baptized in salt water through a hole in the ice, I chased whales all over the seven seas for 30 years.

"Been tossed in the air 64 times by the flip of a whale's tail. Been shipwrecked on an iceberg in the arctic, and on a South Sea island, where I came near boiling in a cannibal chief's soup pot. Have weathered seven trips around the Horn, and all kinds of hurricanes and typhoons. But I came through it all with a whole skin, and though my sea legs are not quite as good as they used to be I'm still a pretty lively fellow for my years, considering that I'm 81 now and turning 82 next February."

A Whale of a Whaler.

What a whale of a man he must have been in his prime, I had thought, when he removed his cap to show me that there isn't a gray hair on his well-thatched head, and what a whale of a lot of sea yarns he must have. But would he spill 'em?

"Yep," he had just time enough to spin one or two. But what kind of yarn would I have he wanted to know.

"Ever been mixed up in a mutiny on the high seas?" I asked, for he hadn't mentioned anything about mutinies in his brief, snappy sketch of his adventurous career.

"Sure have, by Jonah!" he replied, and turning to a dapper-looking middle-aged man in the uniform of a ship's mate who accompanied him, and whom he had introduced as his "man Friday for the past 37 years whose name happens to be Monday Browne," he said:

"Monday, where's that knife and that sennit?"

While Monday was looking for these "props" in a large paper bag that he carried, the captain explained that his "matey" is the only living American ever born aboard a whaling ship, and since his birth occurred on the famous bark Petral on a Monday when it was approaching the 180th meridian or "date line," and it was still Monday the next day when he was christened he was given that name.

"You see this knife," he went on, when the weapon had been placed in his hands. "Well, there are no crimson stains on it now, but there have been. It was used with deadly effect on one of the meanest skunks that ever lived, but I'll spin the yarn from the beginning.

Always One Bad Man.

"There were always 32 men and four officers besides the captain in the crew of a fully-manned old-time whaling ship, and as a general rule there used to be at least one 'bad man' among them. Sometimes he was to be found among the foremost hands, but more often perhaps he was an officer hired for the purpose of driving the men for all they were worth.

"We had such a man as second mate on my third whaling voyage in the good ship Maria of New Bedford, and he was very hard on anyone who was sick.

"My good friend, George B. Francis, of Edgartown, had the misfortune to fall ill on that voyage, and as he lay at the point of death, that second mate went down into the fo'cas'le and dragged him from his bunk and onto the ship's deck by the hair of his head.

"Lord knows he couldn't stand up, in fact he was too weak to hold his head up, but the mate made him sit down on a coil of rope and ordered him to make this sennit which you see in my hand. It is made with seven strands of rope yarn braided as women used to braid their hair, and it is wrapped around a shroud or stay to keep the sails from chaffing them.

"The poor fellow made it the best he could, and had hardly finished it when he fell over dead. Then the second mate actually kicked the body several times.

"That was too much for us and that night we got ready for mutiny, and armed ourselves with harpoons, knives and other gear used in killing and cutting up whales. But when we stormed the captain's quarters with a demand that we be allowed to punish the second mate as we saw fit we learned that he had disappeared.

Done to Death.

"A big Norwegian sailor had plunged this knife into his heart.

"As a result, the ship put into Valparaiso on the coast of Chile, where the entire crew was tried before a judge and jury for murder and mutiny upon the high seas.

"But as the magistrate listened to the testimony as to what had been the cause of the mutiny, tears rolled down his cheeks, and when the evidence was all in he immediately directed the jury to render a verdict of 'not guilty,' saying:

"'If I had been there and seen that man being kicked after he was dead, I verily believe, as God is my judge, I would never have waited for night to take vengeance on his murderer.'"

Captain Folger then recalled the circumstances leading up to his first whaling voyage and an adventure that befell him on it. He lost his mother when he was eight years old, he explained, and at the tender age of 11 he decided that his stepmother was unkind to him. So he stowed away in the coal hole of the Island Home, Captain Manter, which took him from Nantucket to New Bedford, where he got a job as a cabin boy on the whaling bark Mount Wollaston, Captain Edward B. Coffin.

Eighty days out of New Bedford, the ship made Juan Fernandez, the island where Alexander Selkirk, who is thought to have inspired Daniel Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe," is supposed to have been marooned for several years. There the cook deserted, and young Folger was promoted from cabin boy to cook, in which capacity he finished the voyage.

Dropped Into Ocean.

"But before that," he said, "I took a fool notion one day to go aloft and look for whales. I climbed about 100 feet above the deck, but I got careless and lost my hold when the ship heeled over in tacking, and down I went into the ocean like a cannonball.

"A boat was lowered as quickly as possible, and the ship was turned about, but it was getting dark when I fell, and they couldn't find me, so I was given up for lost. And I certainly thought I was.

"Fourteen hours later, however, the lookout on the ship saw a white splash in the water which was thought to be a whale, and the boats were lowered to kill it.

"The third mate's boat beat the others to the point where the white spray had been seen, and as it drew near he saw that it was no whale that was causing the commotion in the water, by myself, little Gussie Folger, lying on my back and kicking my heels to keep afloat.

"When I was pulled into the boat I fainted from exhaustion, and was unconscious for four days. But the captain of the whaler worked over me all of the time and finally brought me around all right. I can't tell how it was that I didn't drown, as I wasn't much of a swimmer.

"On that voyage I lost two very good friends, Benny Pease and Frank Kempton, both of Edgartown. Pease was drowned when the line of a harpoon stuck in the back of a 100-barrel whale got around his leg and yanked him out of a boat, and Kempton was killed outright when the flip of a whale's tail crushed the bow of a boat in which he was standing after hurling a harpoon."

Almost Lynched.

"My first thought on reaching New Bedford after that voyage was to inform the relatives of my lost shipmates about their deaths, but I shall never forget, the longest day I live, the reception I got. It was storming when I reached Edgartown, and I had on my oilskins. Guess I looked like a tramp. At any rate, when I called at the home of Mrs. Pease, her daughter came to the door and begged me to stand outside while she called her mother.

"I hardly knew how to tell my story when Mrs. Pease appeared, and finally I blurted out that I had come to tell her that I had seen her son, Benny, killed by a whale.

Captain Augustus "Whale Oil" Folger, out of New Bedford, who chased the leviathan on seven seas for 30 years.

"She dropped in a faint at the shock of the sad news, while the daughter began to scream that I had killed her mother. 'Murder!' she cried several times, and soon there was a threatening crowd around me. Some of them were for lynching me on the spot, and I was roughly handled for a few minutes, until I explained my errand.

"Then the daughter fainted, too, but the mother soon revived, and throwing her arms about my neck she declared that I was welcome to her home as long as I cared to stay."

In case you are weeping over these sad stories, however, here's an anecdote about Captain Folger's baptism that will make you laugh through your tears.

Baptized Through Ice-Hole

"I'm a Baptist, but not a hard-shelled one," he said, though I was baptized by immersion through a hole in the ice at Nantucket when I was 19 years old. A newspaper report of the incident said that I came out of the icy water smiling, but that's not true. I came out with a grimace and said to the preacher: 'It's cold as hell!' To which he replied: 'Amen, brother.'"

That reminded "Whale Oil Gus" of another good one about a preacher and his wife whom he was bringing back to the United States from one of the islands in the South Atlantic, where they had been doing missionary work.

On the passage the ship ran into a terrific storm and gale and as it tossed about like a log with all sails furled except the mainsail and topsails, and reefs in them, the preacher and his wife were awfully scared. To allay their fears they prayed earnestly, but the harder they prayed the louder became the cracking and creaking of the ship's timbers as great waves crashed down on her decks.

Eventually the strain on the nerves of the preacher's wife made her hysterical and she cried out:

"I can't bear this suspense any longer. Can't you find out if the ship is really doomed, or at least, if the captain and crew think it is?"

Still at It.

"Well, I've always heard," said the preacher, "that when sailors feel that their ship is doomed they always stop swearing and cussing."

"Then for Heaven's sake open that porthole window and listen," urged his wife.

With the window of the porthole open and his ear to it, the preacher could hear the bellowing voices of the ship's officers and crew during lulls in the storm, and after listening to them for a minute, he turned to his wife and raising his hands above his head, he cried out:

"Thank the Lord they are still a cussing!"

Captain Folger then recalled an occasion when the crew of a whaling ship, of which he was a member, actually did some reverent praying.

Struck by Typhoon.

"On a voyage in the bark Lettitia, of New Bedford, Captain Grew," he explained, "all went well until we reached the Indian ocean, and there a typhoon struck us. Out of a clear sky it came so suddenly that the ship's sails were torn to ribbons before we could get them furled and all of her masts except the mainmast were broken off.

"To save ourselves from being washed overboard when the ship heeled over we had to lash ourselves to the stubs of the masts as quickly as possible, and though all of us had been doing more or less swearing and cussing but a few minutes before, we changed our tune mighty sudden and went to praying, every man of us. Thirty-two prayers went up and in answer to them along came the good ship Alfred Gibbs, of New Bedford, to our rescue."

On another occasion, however, after a big whale, maddened by the thrust of a harpoon that hadn't reached a vulnerable spot, had towed a whale boat containing "Whale Oil Gus" and a group of his shipmates many miles away from their ship, so violently that their craft sprung a leak and they had to cut the tow line, prayer alone didn't seem sufficiently efficacious to effect their salvation.

So when it seemed impossible for the six men to keep the boat afloat much longer by bailing and praying, they agreed that something else religious must be done. Each was asked in turn what he could do in the way of a religious act besides pray, and all "passed the buck" as the old army saying goes, to red-headed George Coffin. He had always gone to Sunday school as a kid with his shoes shined and hair brushed, they said, and was just the man to do something religious.

"All right," he finally agreed, "if we must do something religious besides praying, supposin' we take up a collection," and taking off his hat he passed it around.

That cheered up everybody and instead of giving up hope, they went on bailing more furiously than ever and managed to keep the boat afloat until their ship finally located them and picked them up.

Shipwrecked Among Cannibals.

Captain Folger did most of his whale hunting in the south seas, and once he was shipwrecked on an island that was inhabited by cannibals. He had visions of ending his days in the cannibal chief's soup pot, but when he was about to be put in it he began to sing a hymn, and the chief liked it so well that he demanded another and another.

"I had to sing until I was black in the face," laughed 'Whale Oil Gus,' "and the only reason I wasn't eaten was because I was such a good substitute for a phonograph that the chief decided to keep me. After a time I was allowed considerable liberty and eventually I escaped in a native boat and was picked up by a whale ship."

Brushed by Ice.

On his only whaling voyage into the Arctic regions Captain Folger had the misfortune to be on one of the 37 ships which were crushed in the ice in a single day—the greatest disaster that has ever befallen the whaling industry.

For five days he was marooned on an iceberg, with nothing to eat or drink, and was chewing his boot laces to keep from starvation when he was rescued by the whaler Progress, then one of the most famous vessels operating in northern waters. Different ships picked up the other castaways, but not until they had suffered indescribable tortures.

Asked if he believes the story that Jonah was swallowed by a whale, "Whale Oil Gus" declared that he knows his Bible, because it's the only book he has ever read, and it doesn't say any such thing about Jonah.

"The Good Book says that 'the Lord prepared a great fish that swallowed Jonah,' but it couldn't have been a whale, because, although a whale's mouth will hold 25 people, an orange will choke him. The largest whale ever captured was 174 feet in length and weighed 400 tons, but its throat was only four and one-half inches in djameter.

"Besides, a whale is not a fish, but a warm-blooded mammal, like a cow. The female of the specie gives birth to one baby once in five years, and it is suckled. A whale's eye is not bigger than a cow's, and its ear is the size of a lead pencil, yet it can hear a noise 12 miles away. Moreover, a whale does not swim like a fish, but by using its tail like the propeller of a boat it can swim 40 knots an hour."

Since his retirement from the hazardous occupation of whale-hunting, 20-odd years ago, Captain Folger and his man Monday have been exhibiting an embalmed whale and giving lectures on whales and whaling in all the large population centers of the west and south. He has also spoken in many churches, schools and clubs, and is very proud of the 2,500 letters he has received complimenting him on his ability to entertain and edify an audience.

He is now visiting Boston for the first time in 15 years, and after spending a few days with his only daughter, Mrs. Sadie McKellar, of 1115 Hyde Park avenue, he plans to drop anchor for a short time in his home port, Nantucket, out of which there were 1,200 whalers sailing in his father's time.

"From Walking To and Fro in the Earth"

(A Personal Reminiscence)

In Which Pierre Van Paassen Tells, as Only He Could Tell, of How, in Atlanta, An Image Arose From the Past and Became a Reality.

By PIERRE VAN PAASSEN

PIERRE VAN PAASSEN.

PARIS—There is one story in the Bible which has always exercised a peculiar fascination on me. It is to be found in the first chapter of the Book of Job, and treats of, what must have been, I imagine, an extraordinary occurrence, and to me a puzzling one, in the eternal mansions on high. With the majestic simplicity of that ever-amazing book it is told in that particular chapter how there came "a day when the sons of God presented themselves before the Lord" and how "Satan also came among them."

In my boyish fancy, long ago, I could picture that scene to the last detail. There was no difficulty about that part at all. The thing that perplexed me enormously, however, was this: What was Satan doing up there in Heaven? I do not happen to be in my theological mood today, no, not at all; nor do I feel called upon at this juncture to play the role of a sort of celestial Sherlock Holmes. Another day perhaps, another day when the skies of France are overcast and murky, the atmosphere might be more propitiate to delve into the sombre doings of the Prince of Darkness.

Moreover, it is not with this text that I am primarily concerned here, but with the next one rather, in which Satan gives his reply, after having been asked whence he came. Said he: "from going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it."

I may as well admit frankly that I used to envy the Devil his excursions. Going to and fro in the earth! That's just exactly what I wanted to do. I do not know at what particular date in history the Book of Job was composed. Nobody knows. But of this I am positive: Satan must have had an interesting time of it on his goings to and fro. True, automobiles and express-trains and airplanes did not exist in Job's days. We know that for certain. But we also may infer with a comfortable degree of assurance that the Devil was never confined to our human and to him puerile means of locomotion. Not he! No less a personage than the imaginative Jean Wier, physician to the Duke of Cleve, who flourished about the fifteenth century, sets forth with illuminating detail, the ways and manners in which Satan was wont to transport himself in less time "than it takes a man to bat an eyelash," from one end of the earth to another. When we talk of progress, we surely have a long way to go!

The same trustworthy Doctor Wier, of pleasant memory, goes on to say in his 16,000-page monogram on the Devil's habits, that the Fiend sometimes took human beings with him on those rapid-transit expeditions of his. Numerous instances were known in the Middle Ages. Wier supplies names and addresses for the skeptical. Giving the Devil his due, it should be added at once, that he invariably brought back his passengers and deposited them safe and sound and, apparently, none the worse for their experience at the starting point. Except in one case, mentioned by the selfsame Wier. But that had to do with a rather scurrilous individual, who had been caught cheating at dice in a tavern at Amiens, and therefore was probably good riddance, for which the Devil deserves gratitude rather than censure.

I can see now that had I known as a boy of those swift and free rides on the Devil's back, I would surely have left my window open at nights, to facilitate matters, so to speak. Afraid? Not in the least. The Devil is too familiar a figure for little Flemish boys for that. They see him at least once a year strutting about, forked tail, horns and all, in the processions and civic pageants. At the fairs, he is in fact to this day, the most popular reveler.

* * * *

But whence came this inordinate desire to travel in one so young? Ah, that's another story. Long ago we had in our home, when it still existed, one particular book, which was so thumb-marked and smeared and torn that it wouldn't fetch a nickel today in a second-hand shop. To us boys, though, it was a huge and inexhaustible treasure. The title was: "The Earth and Her Peoples." What dreary Sunday afternoons, when the wind was howling outside and the rain came beating down upon the window panes, did I not spend poring over that delightful and thick volume with my brothers, who now sleep forever in the bosom of Mother Flanders, on "the field of honor."

I can see the illustrations yet across the intervening years. No Indians, let me assure you, ever looked quite as savage in real life as they did in "The Earth and Her Peoples." And the fierce camel-drivers of the Arabian desert? How true were the illustrations and how realistic, especially when it came to showing the daggers and scimitars and other high-grade Damascus cutlery that these gentlefolk affect. We boys swore right there and then that some day we would set out together and make the acquaintance of all those distant cousins—and clean up on them.

But we grew up and the old book faded from our memories. Indians and Eskimo and Arabs and Germans and Tartars slunk back into the limbo of forgotten things. A cataclysm shook the universe. Men were uprooted and cast adrift. The world was filled with the metallic clatter of war. Ancestral ties were snapped, because ancestral homes were smashed to dust. Yet, by and through the same devastating process, the things that had seemed childish fancy a few years before, became reality. I really went to walk "to and fro in the earth" as I had so ardently wished, and I came to know some of the peoples of the earth, which the book had so tantalizingly depicted.

Of the Germans I had seen enough between 1914 and 1918, but now followed Indians in Canada and Eskimo on the top of the world. With the Hudson Bay Expedition I mushed through Arctic snows under the shifting Northern Lights in the company of strange silent men; tight-lipped and strong.

The war, you might say, had cut my life in two. I only knew a "before" and an "after." The day when war was declared found me leaning against a moss-covered tower in the close of an old Latin school reading Saint Augustine. On the day peace was signed I hunted for the spot where the tower had stood—and found it not. But I came to see the tundra-peaks of the vast solitude of which I had dreamed in my youth, and the sun-lands of the east and the blue Mediterranean that has always, since the crusade and before, attracted the men of the chill northern climes because of its strange and almost narcotic-like bliss.

* * * *

Going to and fro in the earth! Bagdad and Cork, Vilno and New York, Atlanta and the Lebanon, the Sahara and the icy fjords of Finland. They followed each other in swift and bewildering rotation. One day saw me sitting in the sun-drenched court of Al-Azar in Cairo listening to a Koranic scholar enumerate the ninety and nine attributes of God, and on another day I flew after Carol on his way to a throne in Bucharest. Reverently I trod the deep Valley of Jisreel, where Darius and his host shouted their savage battle-cries as they moved upon Jerusalem; and where also the weeping remnant of Israel followed the chariots of Shalmanezzar loaded with the spoils of God's House in the Holy City. I counted the stars above the well where Mary filled her jars in Nazareth. And in Capri I stumbled over stones that once had fitted into the bath of Tiberius Darius I was pursued by Druses in the Syrian desert, by Bedouins in Ibn Saoud's domains. I explored the ruins of Penetanguishene, the first Christian mission station on the American continent, and found Jean Breaboeuf's inkwell and scissors and crucifix, given him by the King of France.

* * * *

Dream images became reality. The figures who had filled "The Earth and Her Peoples" were made flesh. I have not told that the book at home was an old one and really consisted of a collection of issues of a popular magazine. Such it was. One section dealt with the Civil War in America. The name of Lee was not unfamiliar when I reached Atlanta, but the name of Shenandoah I learned to pronounce first in The Constitution office. I had never dared to utter it before. It looked worse than Sanskrit in my childhood.

There were pictures too of the Civil War. Stilty and stiff lithographs they were, but withal the product of the imagination of a for-that-time gifted artist, no doubt. Men did not lie and hulk in trenches like rats in their holes in those stirring days. They stood up and fought. When they had fired a shot, they re-loaded their flints right in sight of each other and took aim. We didn't see the fellows we were firing at in France.

And then there were pictures of the towns and cities that figured in that terrific struggle of the sixties. One I remember. It showed a street scene in Atlanta. Gentlemen in white trousers strolled along leisurely. Darkies were hauling cotton. There was also a railway station with a big hooded shed. I landed at that station in 1924. Dreams were coming true.

One particular drawing stands out vividly in my memory. It also dealt with the Civil War, or rather, with the last phases of it. Sherman was in Atlanta and had notified the inhabitants that he was going to burn the town. Military necessity, I imagine. The phrase became familiar in 1915, when an English battery trained its yawning muzzles on the place where we read "The Earth and Her Peoples" in our childhood. The drawing showed a prominent citizen of Atlanta. He had his little boy by the hand. He was shown in conversation with General Sherman. My mother used to explain to us that the gentleman was trying to persuade the general to spare the town. That was the picture.

Years passed. And then there came a day when I went to call upon the late Judge Andrew Calhoun in his chambers at the Court building. I found the genial and cultured old man in a reminiscent mood. He talked of slavery days, of Atlanta before the fire. Between blue tobacco clouds there arose a vision before my eyes of the past, vivid and tranquil and harmonious. I think I learned more about the old south and its civilization, about the negro question and the events that led up to the Civil War in that hour with Judge "Andy" Calhoun than from all the books I ever perused on the subject. I realized there had been something beneficent in that civilization of patriarchal grandeur. I felt the relationship between "Massa" and his slaves.

* * * *

And then Judge Calhoun said something that suddenly electrified me. He was talking of the invaders from the north and the ruthless devastation they brought in their wake and of the last but vain efforts to make General Sherman desist from his plan to level Atlanta with the ground. At this point I interrupted the judge's account.

"Yes," I said, "there was an Atlanta gentleman who took his son with him to see General Sherman on the occasion of the general's last visit to Atlanta, when he received quite a different reception from that of 1864."

"You are right," replied Judge Calhoun, meditating. Then he told me the story of the visit of that boy with his father.

"It was about 1878," continued Judge Calhoun. "Sherman had long wanted to visit Atlanta and go over the old route of his march to the sea through Georgia, but the time had never been propitious. He doubted if he would have been welcomed, and in that he was probably right. In 1878, however, with the bitterness of the Civil War dying out, accompanied by his brother and a sister he traversed the route of his march through Georgia from Chattanooga, via Atlanta, to Savannah. In Atlanta he stopped at the old Kimball House, where the leading Confederate veterans of the city, among them being Captain Evan P. Howell, Captain James W. English, William T. Newnan and William J. Garrett and others, made a social call on him.

"Captain Howell's son happened to be in his office, where the committee assembled for the call on General Sherman, and the boy, then 14 years old, accompanied the committee on its call on the general.

"Who was that boy?" I asked.

"It was Clark Howell, the present editor of The Constitution," was the judge's reply.

Table Manners at Bridge Are Just as Important as at Dinner

ABLE manners go a long way toward establishing a person's rating in any social group—at the card table as well as at the dinner table. Why some people fail to realize this is hard to understand. Perhaps it is because the credit they receive for polished ways at meal times really does not belong to them, but should be credited entirely to their parents. The truly graceful, thoughtful, observant, poised man or woman will reveal his or her innate qualities almost invariably at both kinds of tables.

What might be called "the mechanics of table manners" are based chiefly upon practical common sense coupled with consideration for others. The spectacle of a man eating with his knife is not pleasing, nor is the exhibition of a "card-bender" who twists a pack all out of shape while doing what he calls shuffling.

Slapping the cards down on the table with undue emphasis is in the same class with taking the biggest possible mouthful of mashed potatoes. Failing to place the newly-shuffled pack at your right, so that they will be handy to the next dealer at his left, is comparable to "elbowing the knife and fork." Laying down the dummy in a lazy style, without regard to how conveniently your partner can reach and pick out each card, is just as considerate as leaving the spoon in a coffee cup so that it may be upset on a neighbor's lap. Collecting the tricks in a general heap, without neatly separating them, rates with buttering a whole slice of bread, taking a bite and then setting it down on a nice new tablecloth.

Absolute beginners have some excuse for failure to obey the simple rules of bridge table manners. They have not had a chance to learn. But they will learn quickly if they have been taught one of the basic rules of etiquette under all circumstances—observe what the others do, and govern yourself accordingly. Failure to do this, in any situation, implies lack of inborn courtesy and is so interpreted by thousands of bridge players who "care."

No Wonder!

"During the World War, in 1918, I saw the nearest to a perfect hand I've ever seen," writes Mrs. P. C. Morgan, of Portsmouth, Va. "It was in San Francisco. Two naval officers and their wives were playing family against family. Mrs. B. thought she played cards well and was teaching Lieutenant B., who thought he didn't know much about the game.

"Lieutenant B. was dealt twelve diamonds—all but the three-pot—and a four of spades. Mrs. B had the other three aces and a jack of spades, but not a solitary diamond. Lieutenant and Mrs. A. had all the other face cards. Remember that B.'s wife thought he did not know much about the game.

"He bid one diamond, she one no trump, he two diamonds. She, with a nasty look, two no trumps. He three diamonds.

"She: 'If you can say three diamonds, I can say three no trumps. John, I bid three no trumps.'

"He: 'Four diamonds.'

"She, with a gasp and murder in her eye: 'John! Four no trumps.'

"He: 'All right, you can have it.'

"And they took exactly three tricks.

"She: 'Why didn't you go on with your diamonds?'

"He: 'What's the use? No trump topped them.'

"That was twelve years ago, when there was little, if any, pre-emptive bidding. I am A.'s wife. The Bs are divorced!"

A Pretty Squeeze Play

Here's the way one of the hands wound up in a recent American Bridge League championship game, with Curt H. Reisinger, of the Knickerbocker Whist Club, playing it. He held the last remaining trump, which was the jack of hearts, and the queen and five of clubs. In dummy were the eight of spades and the ace and six of clubs. It was his lead and the trump lead assured the remaining tricks, for his left-hand opponent had to discard either his nine of spades, making the dummy's eight good, or else the guard to his king of clubs, which would give declarer two club tricks. The right-hand opponent had the jack, ten and seven of clubs, which were inconsequential except to make the last tricks impossible for the declarer if he led anything but the trump.

Bridge Intimacies

Philip Hal Sims, the 300-pound star of the Knickerbocker Whist Club, whose championship achievements in the last few years are unsurpassed in bridge history, is an expert revolver shot, and one of the best of amateur three-cushion billiard players. His favorite game, though, aside from bridge is golf. He probably can clout the little ball as far as anyone in the world, with the possible exception of Babe Ruth and Clarence Gamber, but in general his golf does not compare with his performances in the other games.

A Law a Week

Giving Information About a Trick—Any player, except dummy, may, before a trick is turned and quitted, demand that the cards so far played be indicated by their respective players; but should either adversary, in the absence of such a demand, in any way call attention to his own card or to the trick, declarer may require the partner of the offender to play his highest or lowest card of the suit led, or to win or lose the trick. A quitted trick may be examined upon demand of any player whose side has not led or played to the following trick, but no information may be given as to the card played on it by each player except as to who took the trick.

(Next week—Advising partner during the play.)

Contract Systems

When should you double the opponents "for business" instead of going on with your own bidding, if you believe your own side has a pretty sure game in the cards?

This is a matter of weighing the probable reward for defeating the opponents against the probable reward for going ahead and making your own game. Naturally, whichever appears to be the greater should be the one chosen.

The value of the first game of a rubber may be roughly estimated as being worth in the neighborhood of 450 points. In this situation, an apparently sure game should not be passed up in order to set the other side three tricks, which, doubled, is worth only 400. You should make your own game unless you can set the other side at least four tricks, worth 600.

A side which has already won the first game can place a value of approximately 550 points on the second game unless it can set the opponents at least four tricks.

A side which has lost the first game can value the winning of the second one at about 450. It therefore should not sacrifice a sure second game unless it can defeat its vulnerable opponents two tricks doubled, which are worth 600.

With both sides vulnerable a game is worth about 650, and should not be sacrificed except to defeat the opponents three tricks doubled, worth 1,000, or else two tricks worth 600, with a chance for the third.

Of course, it is frequently difficult to know whether to rate a game as being sure, and just as difficult to estimate dependably how many tricks you are likely to set your opponents. In all such apparent situations, however, the good player will stop and mentally write down the score both ways, comparing his two totals before settling upon his course of action.

Skill in estimating these close questions is one of the chief differences that distinguish the expert from the average player.

When should you overbid your hand intentionally and take a "set" instead of letting opponents make an apparently sure game?

Auction Problems

North bid one heart, East passed, South bid one spade and all passed. What would you, as West, lead from the following hands?

A
♠62 ♥J853 ♦K942 ♣KJ3

B
♠652 ♥J853 ♦K9542 ♣9

C
♠62 ♥J853 ♦A542 ♣K92

♠K642 ♥QJ1082 ♦63 ♣85

In this situation, it is plain that declarer's probable plan to make game will be to establish the dummy's side suit, hearts. In doing this, his chief problem probably will be to have enough entries into dummy to run the suit after it is established, and after the defensive side's trumps are out of the way. Hence the best defense is to upset his plan, and is possible by trying to drive out such side entries.

Those side entries are bound to be in diamonds or clubs, if dummy has any. Hence a lead of one of those suits is indicated, since a lead of either trumps or hearts would constitute helping declarer to consummate part of his likely plan.

With hand A, those suits cannot be led without making what is ordinarily a "negative" lead, one to be avoided. Yet in this situation, the lead is justified. It should be the deuce of diamonds, for two reasons—first, there is less to lose in leading away from a king than from a king-jack; second, the fourth best lead helps your partner to count the declarer's hand as well as your own.

With B, the singleton club is a better lead than the underlead of the diamond king, and hence should be made.

With C, the ace of diamonds should be led, giving you a chance to see dummy and note where his side high card or cards may be, so that you can then lead through it or them.

D is so freakish, considering the bidding, that the queen of hearts is probably the best lead. Leading hearts is likely to force the declarer to trump the suit later and conserve your own trumps, leaving your side in command of the end-game situation.

The New Problem

The six of spades having been led at no trumps, how would you plan the play of the following hands?

The Sorrows of Tweetyman

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

—By—
John
Galsworthy

With Nothing to Bank on but Her Husband's Possibilities, Marian, With Forsyte Shrewdness, Set Out to Cash in on Them

"Daddy, daddy! Quick. Uncle Albert's biting mummy's neck!"

WHEN Marian, daughter of Nicholas Forsyte, married Edward Tweetyman in 1882, Nicholas was heard to say: "That chap'll never make money, she'd better have married his brother." The remark, repeated on Forsyte 'Change, invited the family's dispassionate consideration of two individuals as far apart in character and appearance as is permitted by the laws of consanguinity and partnership.

The two Tweetymans were engineers by profession, and regrettably, it was felt, pump manufacturers in practice, having their business premises in King William street. Albert, the elder, was square and stocky in build, red and fleshy in face, with an early smile, and Georgian eyes that reminded one of a bull concerned with Europa. He it was who took the orders, directed the operations, and made the money.

Edward, the younger, was a little taller and a great deal thinner, with a refined white face and hollowed temple bones; his weak hair waved faintly on his white forehead, his weak and fair mustache drooped like twin wisps of hay above a selfless smile and his pale blue eyes looked wistfully forth with the saint-like fervor of an inventor. He invented the pumps, or at least understood how they worked, had a passion for truth and lived, as it were, at the bottom of the wells for which they were both designed. Incidentally he received what his brother didn't. It was not much. But being of a loyal and unassuming nature he was not conscious of the discrepancy.

Albert had the force of one born to rake in, Edward the charm of one born to give out. The family soon perceived how just had been the remark of Nicholas. But it is not improbable that in this conclusion Marian had been before them. She had, for a daughter of Nicholas, a somewhat sweetened disposition, redeemed by a distinctly having tendency; a good-looking, well-built young woman with an instinctive knowledge of how to dress any shop window.

In marrying Edward Tweetyman she had perhaps overlooked the fact that before you can dress a shop window there must be one to dress. The fellow had none. His frontage, as it were, was of stained glass and she could set nothing in it. With the real shrewdness which she inherited from her father she had accepted the fact before her honeymoon was over and had decided to exhibit him unvarnished and ungarnished for what he was worth. This was extraordinarily little in a monetary sense—say four hundred a year and possibilities. She herself had the three hundred and fifty which Nicholas, with a perfect equity, gave to all his children when he threw them out of the nest in Ladbroke Grove. But even in the eighties, seven hundred and fifty a year was not the income of a Forsyte with a collecting propensity and fashionable proclivities, so that it was not surprising that Marian banked on the "possibilities."

Difficult, indeed, to live with Edward Tweetyman without noticing how illumined by ideas he was; as from one of those wells to which he was always fitting his pumps, they bubbled from him by day and even by night. But, with her more practical nature, Marian soon grasped the fact that Edward's mind never pursued those ideas to the pitch of profit; his mind stopped at the discovery —the invented machine; what would come of it he left to "my brother." So left, they were not possibilities; Albert, in the words of the prophet, or rather of her cousin George Forsyte, would always "nobble the lot." It was not long before she was saying on Forsyte 'Change that Edward was "a genius and a saint"; which, in the terms of family common sense, equaled "unpractical and rarefied in his conjugal attentions." And every sympathy was felt with Marian's obvious intention to fill the silk purse she had acquired.

It was thought, however, that she might have trouble, bounded on the west by Nicholas and on the east by his brother. She herself recognized these limitations, for her first attempt was to break towards the south and ally her Tweetyman with one Charles Godmore, of North street, Westminster. He it was who, not long before, had eaten the cherries of Rachel and Ciceley, on the Lake of Lucerne, to show them that maggots were harmless when taken in any quantity and had been a friend of the family ever since. Meeting him at a dance given by her aunt, Mrs. Roger Forsyte, at Prince's Gate, Marian soon discovered in him a fanatical devotee of ice cream.

He had, in advance of science, expressed the opinion that there was nothing more nourishing and wholesome. "Everybody," he said, "ought to eat it; it only wants a really good machine." She had introduced him and his idea to Edward in a corridor, certain that something would come of it. The acquaintanceship ripened at Hurlingham on tickets furnished by Godmore, a man of independent means, who desired them to see him shooting pigeons; for this was in the first blush of that desirable institution, when a robuster community still connected the expression pigeon shooting with the expression sport.

The afternoon, however, furnished Marian with a fresh instance of her Edward's impracticability and plunged her into a certain gloom. For as Godmore was about to destroy his seventh pigeon running, Tweetyman, who had hitherto been occupied by an idea for helping the rest of his chair to turn itself up on a spring, said loudly: "Look out, bird!" and Godmore missed. Marian took him away almost immediately.

"How on earth, Edward," she said in the hansom cab, "you expect ever to get on if you are so absent-minded I can't think."

Edward smiled and, looking forth with his pale fervor, said:

"Pigeon's winges are hinged like this," moving a bluish white forefinger in front of Marian's eyes.

"Quite!" she answered dryly, perhaps the first use of this expression: "But are you going to do anything about that ice cream machine? Charles Godmore is set on it and he has lots of money."

He had pressed her hand.

"The Romans," he said, "knew how to make ice cream better than we do;" and then began nodding his head, from which she understood that an idea had come to him. She had lived on hopefully and abstained from bothering him with questions for she had a horror of fussing, till one day, going almost mechanically through his pocket; she came on a beautiful little draw-

Walter Q. Gresham At Atlanta

The 17th Corps artillery firing from the Clay road — July 20, 1864

A Noted Federal General, Afterwards Judge and Member of Two Presidential Cabinets, Came to Atlanta, but General Wheeler Refused to Admit Him— July 20, 1864.

By WILBUR G. KURTZ

IN THAT merry decade, dubbed the "gay nineties," the United States of America contributed to the gaiety of nations, a bit of sardonic humor. The decade was not three years old when, as a guesture of comity and amity, our government invited Spain to send representatives to our shores to participate with us in celebrating the four-hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, and the inception of that splendid empire under the blood-red banner of Castile and Leon, in the Americas. Less than five years later, the fleets of Spain were destroyed or driven into hiding, and nearly every vestige of her ancient domain in this hemisphere was erased from the suzerainty of His Most Catholic Majesty.

But the episode of the visit of the Spanish guests in 1893 carried with it its own measure of mirth. When the second Cleveland administration had gotten under way, the high officials at Washington found themselves in the unwelcome position of having to entertain her Hispanic Highness, the Infanta Eulalie, aunt of Alphonso XIII (then a very young person), and the Duke of Veragua, who was a lineal descendant of Christopher Columbus. The invitation to these guests had gone forth from the lately retired Harrison administration, and however embarrassing the affair promised to be, the invitations had to stand. The Spanish minister was on hand to see that all the amenities were preserved, and his first move was to demand a furnished house and a full retinue of servants for Her Highness, the Infanta, in Washington, and another just like it in Chicago.

But President Cleveland and his official family had no notion of doing anything of the kind, and the Spanish minister was informed that both cities afforded excellent hotel accommodations, and her Highness could be well disposed accordingly. It was suspected—it was even hoped—that this would cancel the invitation and close the incident, but not so, for the minister announced that Her Highness would arrive at the appointed time!

Arrive she did, and the gentleman who met her and her suite at the depot was none other than the subject of this sketch, the Hon. Walter Q. Gresham, secretary of state. Mr. Gresham escorted the Infanta to the White House and presented her to President Cleveland. Whatever was proper in the premises, President Cleveland did not return the call, and here was where the whole affair got off on the wrong foot, for the Infanta and the minister took umbrage at it and the good people of Chicago always felt that the lady had no call to vent her spite on them!

The Duke of Veragua was just as much a guest as the Infanta, but from the beginning he was left quite out of the picture as far as the Infanta was concerned. She probably never noticed him in Spain, and saw no reason for doing so on this side of the water, for she persistently refused to meet the duke.

So the state department had much ado to entertain the Spanish guests, so as to avoid a meeting between them, and the social and sight-seeing functions had to be carried in double entry, but Mr. Gresham's efficient secretary was none other than a young gentleman named Kenesaw Mountain Landis.

Arrived in Chicago, the Infanta was lodged at the Palmer House. Now the Palmer House was the ne plus ultra of hostelries at that period, and the pop-eyed yokebry who went to the big city by the lake, and failed to see the silver dollars set in the tile floor of the Palmer House barker shop felt that they had somehow missed the larger things of life!

Whether or not Her Spanish Highness saw the barber shop floor is not of record, but 'twas whispered that the Palmer House bar did a large business, for the state department footed quite a bill for beer, cognac, champagne and cigarettes!

The official host of the visiting lady at Chicago, was the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition, and the presiding genius of that board was Mrs. Potter Palmer, herself! This lady was the social arbiter of Chicago, as well as the wife of the owner of the Palmer House. The latter fact seemed to sink deeper into the bosom of the Infanta, than the former. So here she was, an Infanta of the most ancient of the European monarchies, being entertained and patronized by the innkeeper's wife! It was all too much!

To add to the impertinance of Mrs. Palmer's diamonds outshone, not only the newly installed electric lights in the Palmer House ball room, but the Infanta's own limited array of jewelry, and the latter took a truly hispanic revenge by whispering that Mrs. Palmer's diamonds were of glass. Nay more—when the formal receptions were held. Her Highness persisted in remaining seated, nor did she rise when the suave and portly Vice President Adlai Stevenson approached her throne!

Altogether the visit of the Infanta was not a conspicuous success. One of the ladies of that bewildered entertainment committee wrote Mr. Gresham that, far from cementing the bond of good feeling between the two nations, the effect attained was quite the opposite.

As for the Duke of Veragua, that personage made every effort to please, and was himself immensely flattered by everything that happened. He stood by when President Cleveland opened the world's fair by pressing an electric key and His Grace doubtless thought that the whole business would have been a failure had he, the lineal descendant of Christopher himself, not been present. Every prospect pleased him; nothing was vile. Probably accustomed to naught but meagre savings and circumscribed latitude, he reveled in the broad expanses before him and insisted on going places and seeing things. Commodore Davis began to dispair, for the duke was impervious to hints that 'twas time to go home. Finally Secretary of State Gresham wrote the commodore to take the duke to New York, put him on a boat and tell him good-bye!

Mr. Gresham had many things of more serious import to engage his attention, than this comic opera affair of the Spanish visitors, and in the discharge of his duties he was a most able secretary of state. He was also one of the few brigadier-generals of the Union Army who became a notable figure and had a conspicuous career, after the war of the sixties, and this, in the face of the fact that his political independence carried him from rock-ribbed republicanism to resurgent democracy.

His public career may be said to begin with his appointment by President Grant as United States district judge of the District of Indiana, in 1869. This was followed by an appointment as postmaster-general in President Arthur's cabinet in 1882, his outstanding official act being the exclusion of the Louisiana lottery from the mails. On the death of Secretary of the Treasury Judge Folger, Gresham served for two months as the head of that department. In November, 1884, Gresham accepted an appointment as United States judge for the seventh circuit, which was comprised of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. It was in October, 1892, that Judge Gresham let it be known that he would support Cleveland in the coming election. His break with the republicans was due to his inability to agree with them on the tariff. That same October is notable in the annals of horse-racing, for at Terre Haute, Ind., one beautiful Indian summer afternoon "Nancy Hanks" lowered the record for trotting horses, from 2:8 to 2:4.

It was on January 25, 1893, that Grover Cleveland wrote Walter Q. Gresham from Lakewood, N. J., and asked him if he woud accept the appointment as secretary of state.

Gresham was independent, politically, because he had been independent in every other phase of his career. As a soldier he had manifested such a spirit and in a way entirely consistent with military exactitude.

At the outbreak of the Civil War Gresham was serving in the Indiana legislature, where he aroused the enmity of Governor Oliver P. Morton in a matter touching the self-esteem of that celebrated war-governor. Refused a commission in the army, Gresham returned to his home town, Corydon, and enlisted as a private in a company of his own organization. In August, 1861, Governor Morton reluctantly commissioned Gresham, lieutenant-colonel of the 38th Indiana regiment, soon to be organized at New Albany. After a quiet campaign of camping and drilling in Kentucky, the ex-legislator and lieutenant-colonel was offered the colonelcy of the 53d Indiana, by the governor.

Arrived in Indianapolis, Gresham found that the 53d was a mere paper organization, and the governor coolly informed him that the regiment, if organized, would have to be financed by the officers. Another stormy scene followed, in which the governor was not left in doubt as to what Gresham thought of him! But Gresham got the commission and proceeded to do what was not expected of him; he rallied some staunch friends to his support, and the 53d Indiana was organized at New Albany with Gresham as colonel and William Jones lieutenant-colonel. The regiment was mustered into the service February 22, 1862. This regiment and the two officers named figured conspicuously in the Atlanta campaign, hence this extended notice.

Colonel Gresham and the 53d Indiana participated in the Shiloh, Corinth and Vicksburg campaigns. At the latter place his services won promotion and his new command was the third brigade, fourth division, 17th army corps. After a visit home, he returned to Cairo, Ill., to take temporary command of a division of men returning from furlough, and from there the division proceeded to Huntsville, Ala., where they joined the rest of the 17th corps, commanded by Major-General Frank P. Blair. At Decatur, Ala., May 27, 1864, Gresham was given the command of the fourth division of the 17th corps, succeeding General Crocker, and up to the evening of July 20, 1864, Brigadier-General Walter Q. Gresham remained in command of this division.

The 17th corps joined Sherman's army at Acworth, Ga., June 8th, and was immediately placed on the left of the line in front of Kenesaw

On the 17th of July, the 17th corps crossed the Chattahoochee river at Roswell, and joined at the left of the line that embattled host which for four days in steadily constricted formation converged upon Atlanta. The 17th corps followed the 15th toward Decatur, Ga., some of the latter striking the Georgia railroad near Stone Mountain, where they destroyed several miles of track as they moved toward Decatur. On the 19th, the 17th corps went into camp at Decatur, six miles east of Atlanta. This corps was an unit of the Federal army of the Tennessee, commanded by Major-General James B. McPherson. It consisted of two divisions, the Third, commanded by Brigadier-General Mortimer D. Leggett, and the Fourth, commanded by the subject of this sketch. The other two corps of the Tennessee army were the 15th, commanded by Logan, and the 16th, commanded by Dodge. McPherson's troops were all in or near Decatur on the 19th of July.

General Hood had been in command of the Confederate army only 48 hours previous to the evening of the 19th. He spent some hours of the 18th in remonstrating with the Richmond authorities about replacing General Johnston, and in his book, "Advance and Retreat," General Hood complains that General Johnston, after promising to stand by long enough to enable the new commander to become familiar with the situation, did not do so, but left almost immediately for Macon. General Hood was therefore forced to make the best of his position, and to this is largely due the confusion at headquarters, and the delay that enabled the Federals to reach strategic positions on the Atlanta front. This front was on the north and the east, and because the Federal advance had been expected largely from the north, or in the Peachtree Creek valley, the defense on the east side of the city were insufficiently manned. Detachments of Wheeler's and Jackson's cavalry had done what they could to observe and oppose Federal advances on all rotues, but Hood states further that had he been better served by the cavalry on the east, in the matter of reports, McPherson's presence on the Georgia railroad would have been known to him much earlier than the 20th of July. Hood sarcastically remarks that he didn't know any of McPherson's troops had reached Stone Mountain on the 18th, and were destroying the railroad toward Decatur until he read about it in Sherman's "Memoirs." An entry in C. W. Wills' diary, "Army Life of An Illinois Soldier," dated Decatur, Ga., July 19, gives color to General Hood's remark, the entry recording that a train from Atlanta had reached Decatur that morning!

Be that as it may, Wheeler's cavalry was east of Atlanta watching McPherson, and had been watching him during the Federal advance from Roswell, and General Wheeler cannot be held responsible for any confusion at the Atlanta headquarters.

On the morning of the 20th, the Federal Tennessee army moved toward Atlanta, Logan and the 15th corps left the Decatur court house, via Atlanta avenue and DeKalb avenue, and made their advance astride the railroad. They were followed by the 16th corps.

The 17th corps crossed to the south side of the railroad and via the Fayetteville road, moved south-west. This road is one of the oldest highways in this section of the state. If and when the people of DeKalb and Fulton counties begin to preserve and memorialize the historic places in their midst, this should be one of the "Roads of Remembrance," for its dusty, unpaved length was traversed by both the contending armies. Wheeler's horsemen withdrew from Decatur, toward Atlanta, on its upper reaches, followed by the 7th corps, July 20th; Hardee's tired soldiers dragged leaden feet along its winding course, lower down, in the early hours of the forenoon, July 22d, when marching to a forlorn hope at the flank and rear of McPherson's army, and over the red span of the road from below Constitution, north-eastward to Decatur, galloped the horsemen of Wheeler's cavalry on the same day, moving to the attack on Sprague's brigade, posted in the Decatur public square.

Along the present Cottage drive and Oakview road Blair and the 17th marched westward. Blair describes this stage of the march as along a "very crooked country road, the general direction of which was toward Atlanta, and parallel to the railroad." This area, situated as it was, between the two cities, was far from being a wilderness. Plantations had long since replaced the forests of the Marthasville period, and there were a number of pretentions dwellings, with the usual complements of slave quarters and gin houses. Some of these houses survived the stormy passage of the invaders for years, and even yet one may find here and there an ancient dwelling that sat serenely in the sunshine amid the alarms and excursions of those July days.

Continuing with Blair: "After marching three or four miles I struck the road running nearly north and south, and in front of Clay's house. At this point the fourth division, commanded by Brigadier-General Gresham, discovered the enemy posted a half or three quarters of a mile west of Clay's road, in a strip of timber, who immediately opened with artillery upon my advance. I immediately ordered up two batteries and silenced the enemy's artillery, and in the meantime the Fourth division was deployed into line and advanced, driving the enemy fully a mile and a quarter to a ridge of hills. At this point my right connected with the left of Major-General Logan commanding the Fifteenth army corps."

We are indebted to General Blair, and possibly to him only, for mention of the Clay house and the Clay road. A clear conception of the operations of July 20, 21, and 22d, would be difficult if the locations of both house and road were lost. On the 21st and 22d, the troops of Dodge's 16th corps marched past the Clay house, on the Clay road, and Dodge mentions neither of them. On the 22d, Brigadier-General E. W. Rice, commanding a brigade in Sweeny's division of the 16th, was aligned along the Clay road, between Fair street and the Clay house, and fought a severe defensive battle with Bate's division of Hardee's corps, yet General Rice makes no mention of road or house. So we have General Blair to thank for giving us these battlefield landmarks. The house Blair mentions is that of Jesse Clay, and Clay street is the old Clay road, much improved. This house is located on at least four of the maps in the Official Records Atlas, though it is shown as being on the east side of the road. According to Mrs. C. P. Foster, a granddaughter of Green B. Clay, (Jesse's brother), and who remembers the structure, the Jesse Clay house was west of the road and faced east. It was a one-story log building, with plank nailed over the "chinking" between the logs. It stood, Mrs. Foster said, not over two hundred feet south of Boulevard drive, and on the high ground, west, as stated, of Clay street. General Blair refers to the road as being in front of the house; most roads are in front of houses, and Blair could have meant that the road was between his approach and the house, in which case he would be in agreement with Mrs. Foster's statement.

But there was another Clay house. Jesse Clay had a brother, Green B. Clay, and his house is also shown on the Official Records Atlas maps. Mrs. Foster locates this house —that of her grandfather—precisely at the present intersection of South Howard and Bixby streets. In other words, South Howard street runs through the site of the Green B. Clay house, which was a frame and weather-boarded structure of one story, faced to the westward. South Howard, Bixby and Campbell streets, of this Kirkwood section, are on ground once the Green B. Clay plantation. This location is a little south of east of the Jesse Clay house, and one-half mile from it.

Both Clay houses were on north and south roads, and Blair mentions "Clay's house" and Clay's road. How do we know he meant Jesse Clay? In the first place, the battlefield maps are most explicit on this point, and the distances, as given in the reports, closely check with the known locations on modern maps. For instance, the distance between Clay street and the summit of the irregular ridge along which South Moreland avenue extends is nearly one mile and a quarter—near enough to call it that; this ridge was where Wheeler's cavalry made their final stand, the evening of the 20th, and from which Cleburne's division was driven, the forenoon of the 21st. (Leggett's Hill is part of this ridge). So when Blair states that Gresham's division was deployed on the Clay road, the road by Jesse Clay's house is indicated, for, says Blair, the enemy was driven fully a mile and a quarter to a ridge of hills, which was quite true, but this statement does not mean that Blair's troops traversed that distance themselves; it means that the enemy took a final stand one and a quarter miles from Clay's road, and Blair's troops moved, in their advance, not over three quarters of a mile. Add to this, the report of Blair, covering the movements of the 22d, where he tells of seeing the 16th corps on the "Clay road," halted at noon, en route to the left of the line, and when the Official Records maps are consulted we find the route of that corps was the road that passed Jesse Clay's house.

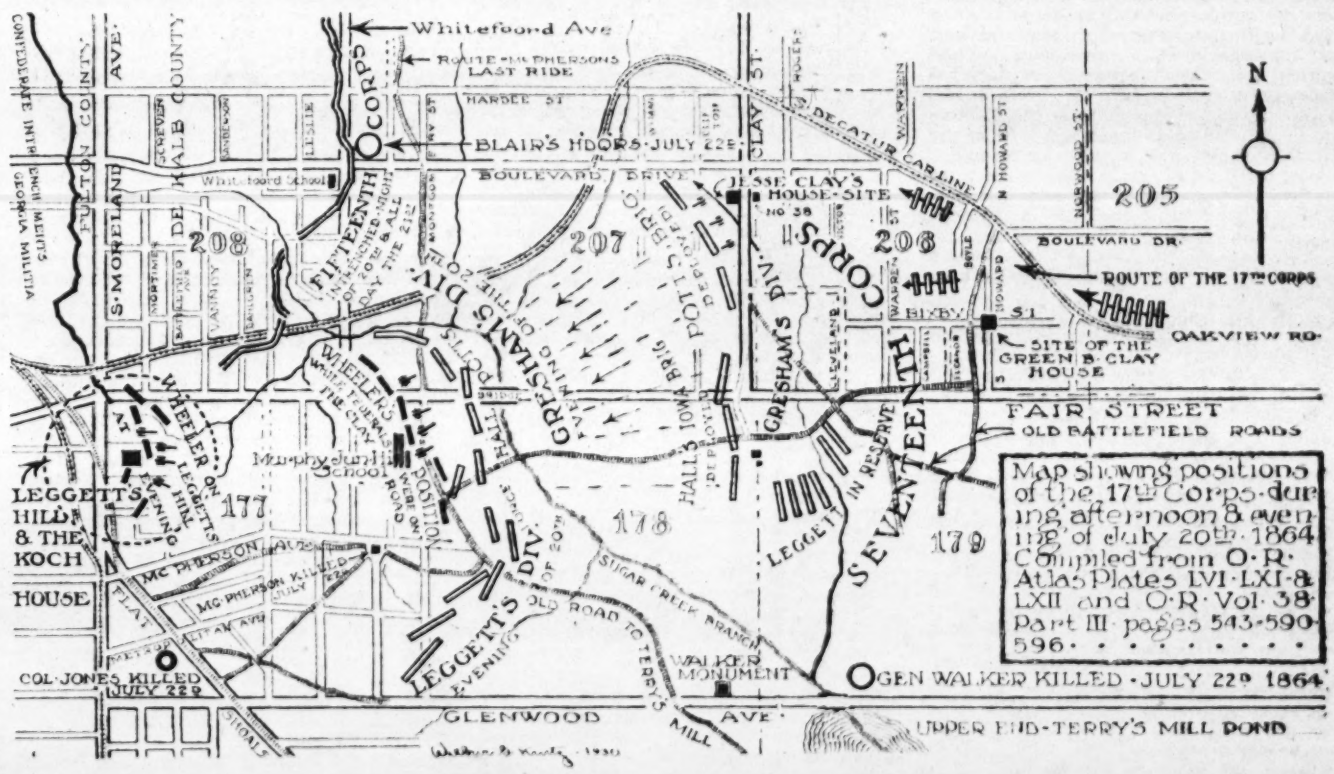

There is a house at 38 Clay street, S. E., re-modeled in recent years, with large trees in the back yard and known in the neighborhood as Clay property. Mrs. Foster states that it was built by members of the family since the war on what was once the Jesse Clay plantation property. It stands across the street from the alleged site of the log house of Jesse Clay, and No. 38 has been confused with the Jesse Clay house, because of the markings on the war-records maps.

Blair's troops could not have moved over three quarters of a mile west of the Clay road, for, says that officer: "At this point my right connected with the left of Major-General Logan, commanding the Fifteenth army corps." "This point" certainly was not on the Moreland avenue ridge for Wheeler and his artillery were there. Then where was the 15th corps? for Blair says he aligned his troops with them. Fortunately, we know. Logan, like Blair, had met with opposition in his advance astride the railroad, and he found the enemy in his front, composed mostly of Georgia militia, but Cheatham's corps began to extend to their right along his front, and from behind a formidable line of breastworks; checked all further progress toward the city. The day was waning, so the 15th corps halted and threw up intrenchments; the maps show this line as generally along the present Whitefoord avenue. To align himself with Logan, Blair's line doubtless crossed the hill on which the Murphy Junior High school now stands, a dominant site within the arc of a circle made by a branch of Sugar Creek, on the west, north and east.

Continuing with Blair, following the mention of the connection with the 15th corps: "I found, however, that I could not advance farther with the Fourth division, as the left of my line was commanded, and in case of an advance would have been enfiladed, by the enemy from a high, bald hill on my left." (This bald hill is "Leggett's Hill," where the Fred Koch house now stands at 282 Moreland avenue, S. E.)

It has been seen that the Fourth division was in the lead, in this move on Atlanta. Let us go back and check up on a few of the details. Gresham's division, preceded of course, by the usual skirmish line, marched by Oakview road. Leggett's division followed. At the Clay road the opposing Confederate forces, under Wheeler, were seen posted in a strip of timber a half or three quarters of a mile west of the Clay road. This placed Wheeler at Whitefoord avenue, on ground later occupied by the Federals. As has been stated. From the hill-slopes just east of Whitefoord, Wheeler opened on the Federals with his artillery. Blair immediately ordered up two batteries, one of them the 15th Ohio, and when Wheeler's guns were silenced Gresham's division deployed began the advance. The division consisted of two brigades; the first, commanded by Colonel B. F. Potts; the 3d commanded by Colonel William Hall. Potts led the advance, and the ground over which he moved lies as near as can be determined between Fair street and the present Boule-

INSTALLMENT IX.

FAWLK, in pajamas and a British warm, gripped one of the runaways to demand an explanation. He got it.

"Fritz—on top of us—millions of 'em."

The man wriggled free and ran.

A signaler appeared, bewildered and stupid.

"Seize park—tractors, at once," Fawlk commanded.

The signaler dived below.

Less than a mile away were seen the advance guard of those masses in field gray. They were moving slowly, casually, like men out for a stroll.

The battery personnel in all stages of undress were at the guns now.

"Open sights at four hundred yards," was the order.

In the roar that followed Fawlk shot a glance at the door of Harley's billet. That massive door of chestnut.

"Trevelyan," he called.

"Sir," sounded from within.

"Get dressed and come here."

"Anything wrong?"

"No, but get dressed."

"Coming right away, sir."

A roof timber was lying at Fawlk's feet. Stooping, he picked it up and laid it against a panel of the door, wedging the other end firmly into the ground.

Like a clumsy elephant Frost came plunging up the steps of the cellar. Fawlk was twenty feet away from the door of Harley's billet when Frost stood panting before him.

"Orders—heavy artillery—retire."

Increasing numbers of those gray figures were pouring over the skyline. A barrage of shrapnel, bright and stinging, burst overhead.

Men were beginning to fall. The whole detachment of number four gun was stretched beside it in ridiculous attitudes.

"Very well, Mr. Frost."

And then pandemonium.

Orders—swiftly yelled and repeated. A final bark from number three—a crackle of musketry—shouts, a scream—and the sound of a man's fists pommeling on a door.

Fawlk did not look back as he moved to where the car waited down the road. He did not even waste a glance at those four silent guns—which like great black toads crouched in the orchard. The faces of men who raced past him were twisted with fear—and the shame of retreat. His own was untroubled—was expressionless. He even smiled.

A little way down the road he saw Freddie Miller.

Freddie was standing on the footboard of a tractor, one of four which, rolling like ships at sea, were racing up to the line.

Freddie was cursing every man and every obstacle in the road. Among other things he cursed the major's car.

"Out of the way, you bloody rats," he cried.

There can be very little doubt what Freddie Miller's fate would have been had not a couple of retreating machine gunners paused in amazement at the spectacle of some one running towards rather than away from the enemy. Inspired by his enthusiasm they set up their spitfire upon its tripod and checked the advance before the battery position until such a time as Freddie had coupled up two of the guns to the tractors and dispatched them down the road in the direction of safety. It is probable he might have saved the other guns had not the driver of the third tractor in eagerness and confusion reversed into a shell hole and blocked the farm road.

In the face of this calamity the machine gunners and the remaining drivers took to flight.

* * * *

Through a seam in the paneling of the massive chestnut door that held him prisoner, Harley Trevelyan watched the first wave of German infantry sweep over the battery position.

There was little evidence of enthusiasm or triumph. The faces of those who came within range of Harley's observation wore expressions of bewilderment at the ease with which the attack had been carried out.

Harley, who could speak German with some fluency, overheard one man say to another:

"Surely, something worse than this is in store for us."

The whole affair was without precedent—a walkover.

Came an order and the door of the harness room was flung open.

With his hands in his trousers pockets Harley walked into a bristle of bayonets.

A young German officer, almost a boy, looked him up and down in a mixture of surprise and admiration.

"Thunder and lightning," he said, "but you're a cool one."

Harley did not return the smile, but he asked,

"Do we take prisoners today—or not, mein herr?"

"We do," was the answer, and from the ranks behind came a grunt of approval.

An order was given and a blue jowled Bavarian placed himself at Harley's side.

"Other prisoners will be coming back," said the officer boy. "You will keep this officer here and join up with the first party that comes this way."

He clicked his heels, saluted Harley, mustered his men and led them onward.

With despair gnawing at his soul Harley Trevelyan sat on an oil drum and watched wave after wave of the victorious army sweep through the battery position. His sensations were not enviable in that moment of shame and impotence. Prisoned behind a wedged door he had not even the satisfaction of having taken part in the defense of the battery. The work of three years lay before him, broken and useless. A litter of dead men and broken metal. It was a tragic end to the high hopes of a few days before. In silent, smoldering anger he watched the pageant develop before him.

His hands were clawed to his forehead like a man striving to remember something.

For three-quarters of an hour men and war material poured over the landscape. The ground trembled to the rhythm of marching feet. The air rang with the clatter and jingle of artillery and limbers. Every moment Harley expected parties of prisoners to pass that way, but none came, and at the end of an hour he and the Bavarian were the only men alive as far as the eye could see. The war had passed over them and beyond.

There was something uncanny about the isolation and the loneliness that had descended upon them. It seemed to have pierced the heavy imagination of the Bavarian, who, until then, had stood an immovable statue, watching Harley with a finger caressing the trigger of his rifle.

"Back," said he. "Get back into your hole." And without waiting for Harley to obey, pushed him into the harness room and wedged the door.

"Cold feet," thought Harley, but a moment later through the crack in the panel he realized that he was wrong.

The Bavarian was robbing the dead.

For perhaps twenty minutes this ghoulish business proceeded with a thoroughness that argued familiarity. To see the bodies of men with whom for the last three years he had been on terms of friendship and affection subjected to this treatment was torture, and when later the door was thrown open Harley's face was white with a passionate desire to kill.

The muzzle of the rifle was trained upon the pit of his stomach, and the Bavarian was looking at him with a greedy light in his small piglike eyes.

"Turn out your pockets," grunted the man, "and if you try any tricks I'll dig out your liver with this bayonet."

It is doubtful if the loss of a few pounds and some personal odds and ends would have weighed with Harley in the circumstances in which he found himself. Beside the freedom he had lost the rest was of little account. But Joan's picture in the little cigaret case was in his breast pocket and the thought of surrendering it to this robber of dead men drove prudence to the winds.

"Then take this for a start," he said, and kicked the oil drum at the Bavarian with sudden and surprising energy.

It was a desperate and seemingly hopeless thing to do, but luck favored him. The drum struck the man's bayonet and deflected the bullet by a hair's breath. An instant later they were locked together in an inextricable tangle of writhing legs and arms.

It was not a gentlemanly fight. The Bavarian had weight as well as strength and getting astride Harley made a valiant attempt to cut his head off with the raw edge of the oil drum, but as he raised it Harley's left hand fastened on his throat like the jaws of a dog. The drum fell from the man's grasp and he gripped Harley's wrist. Harley dragged his right hand free and seizing the Bavarian by the forearm crashed his elbow on the brick floor and broke the bone. With a scream of agony the Bavarian slewed over and fastened his teeth in Harley's shoulder, at the same time driving his knee into Harley's stomach. Harley's breath deserted him with a screech. His hand releasing its grip swept the floor and encountered a hairbrush. It was a common hairbrush with a handle. He had bought it at Doullen's, having lost his own in a battery shift. When a man is lying on top of you trying with his teeth to gnaw a way through to your carotid artery it is not easy to kill him with a hairbrush. But anything is worth trying in an extremity. Harley knew if he failed the Bavarian would take Joan's picture. That was unthinkable, and it lent him vigor. He hooked the brush down with a crash on the base of the man's skull. But as well he might have hit the stone floor beneath them. He tried again, lower down, using the edge, a rabbit punch in the nape of the neck.

The Bavarian made a sick sort of noise and reared himself up dizzily. Harley changed the brush from his left hand to his right and smote again with every ounce of his strength. The brush cut a groove in the frontal bone. But the man was not dead. He struggled to his feet like a drunk and looked vaguely about him for his fallen rifle.

But Harley reached it first, slipped a bullet in the breach and blew out his brains.

The Bavarian sat down quite peacefully in the corner of the harness room and Harley was sick.

* * * *

Sandwiched between the German advance and their reserves at the back Harley Trevelyan stumbled from the harness room into an empty and neglected world. Not a soul was to be seen. For company he had only the dead and the black deserted guns.

An idea was slowly forming in his mind. Had those two guns been put out of action before the retreat. It would be worth finding out.

Rocking drunkenly, he followed the farm road towards number three. The way led him by a litter of straw and rubbish which heaved up amazingly before his eyes.

Then a voice croaked:

"Harley—good God."

* * * *

Harley thought at first his imagination was playing tricks, but the man with straw in his hair certainly looked like Freddie Miller, and sounded like him.

But why—how?

"That's easily told," said Freddie. "Got left trying to pull out the guns. But how did you get back?"

Harley shook his head.

"Didn't—never left. Door of my billet was jammed somehow—falling roof timber, I suppose. Was taken prisoner."

"Then?"

"Didn't you hear that shot?"

"D'you mean?"

Harley nodded. He was in no mood to give explanations. Freddie vanished in the direction of the harness room and returned whistling.

"You're a nut," he said. Then, "what do we do next?"

Harley shrugged his shoulders indifferently.

"Not much. We're bound to be collared before long. But until we are," and he stiffened suddenly, "until we are we might be useful."

"How?"

He indicated how, and in the next hour the breech blocks of the two remaining guns and of three other batteries in that vicinity were dropped with a succession of dull splashes into the farm well.

They did not talk. The work occupied all their attention. Sweating and exultant they went to and fro between the well and the guns. So occupied were they that even expectations of interference did not oppress them.

The monstrous unreality of the whole business had infected them with an excitement to which words could give no expression. Until the last breech block had been committed to the water they did not consider the future as far as it concerned themselves.

"Now what?" said Freddie, his face gleaming with sweat. "Now what, old son? We might lie low and try and wriggle through during the night. It's odds against them having any kind of connected line."

Harley nodded, but his appetite for putting guns out of action was not yet satisfied.

"Or we might snoop along towards Villers Guislan and have a look at those 9.2s."

"I'm game," said Freddie. "T'anyrate we could try."

Keeping in the shelter of a low hedge they started north. Beyond a few distant figures they saw no one. They had gone a quarter of a mile when Harley stopped.

"Got a gun?" he asked.

Freddie shook his head and cursed.

"No—neither have I."

He looked about him, but there were no dead.

Freddie pointed at a roofless cottage nearby.

"Let's have a dekko. Might be some officer's kit about."

There was no sign of life near the cottage, but they approached it cautiously and listened beneath a shuttered window.

"Not a sound," said Freddie. "Come on."

They turned the corner and found themselves confronted by three men grinning pleasantly behind the sights of their rifles.

"Finis," said Freddie. Then in the most execrable German "All right, Hindenburg, threes beat a pair in any game of chance."

Their captors were so far removed from the accepted idea of the brutal and licentious soldiery of the kaiser as to have broken the heart of a patriotic leader writer. They were, in fact, men of simple minds and non-barbarous inclinations. What they were doing in that ruinous cottage when their brothers in arms were engaged in mortal combat is a question to which it would be hard to find a satisfactory an-

When Justice Triumphed

Henry Colin Campbell Met His Doom When He Failed in Effort to Destroy Identity of Victim.

By PETER LEVINS

THE destruction of a human life is a simple enough matter. It is the next step in the crime, the destruction of the victim's identity, that gives the murderer cause to bite his nails in worriment. In a deliberate homicide, where the killer has thought out his crime to the last detail (as he believes), the murderer almost invariably attempts to destroy this link between his victim and himself—and almost invariably fails. The job is not as simple as the usual slayer imagines.

We have seen some notable instances of such failures—among other classic examples, we might cite the Leutgert case, the Bobby Franks murder, the Guldensuppe mystery, and the murder of Anna Aumuller.

Adolph Leutgert was the Chicago sausage manufacturer who dropped the body of the wife he had slain into one of his huge sausage-making vats and boiled it in caustic potash. He neglected to clean out the vat afterward, however, and the police found some incriminating articles in the sediment at the bottom—two gold rings, one having the initials "L. L." engraved inside, a tooth, and two corset steels.

Leutgert got life for the crime.

In the Bobby Franks murder, Leopold and Loeb poured acid on the child's face and then jammed the body into a culvert through which running water flowed constantly. The two conspirators figured that the action of the water would in time completely destroy the corpse, but the body was discovered the day after the crime, and presently Leopold and Loeb went to Joliet for life.

In the Guldensuppe case, the victim, William Guldensuppe, a rubber in a New York Turkish bath, was cut up into pieces and the remains scattered over a wide area. If Guldensuppe had not been seen so often in his bare feet by his fellow employes, the crime might never have been solved, for when the legs were found in a woods in the north Bronx, Guldensuppe's former companions at the baths recognized the peculiar formation of their late associate's toes.

Once the victim was identified, detectives got on the right track and two persons, one a woman, were convicted, the man in the case paying the death penalty.

Similarly, in the Aumuller murder, parts of the body had been scattered over the landscape. The head was never found. All the police had to work on was a pillow slip, in which one section of the torso had been wrapped. This pillow slip was traced, after a most painstaking search, and at the end of the trail the police arrested Hans Schmidt, who confessed and was executed.

And now we have another such failure to relate. In this case, as in the others we have cited, the police had on their hands a crime committed by a murderer of above-average intelligence who realized that the destruction of his victim's identity was a supremely important matter.

Mrs. Rosalie Campbell, the slayer's widow.

The late Mrs. Mildred Mowry, whom Henry Colin Campbell married and then slew. Campbell lost his own life at the hands of the law when he failed in an effort to destroy his victim's identity.

A WOMAN'S BODY WAS BURNING.

Let us see how he, too, was defeated.

The crime was discovered shortly after dawn, February 23, 1929. James Boyle, driver of a delivery truck for a Newark, N. J., baking company, was approaching the town of Cranford, N. J., at 5:30 a. m. when he saw a fire burning just off the Pawnee road, not far from the clubhouse of the Cranford-Nomahegan Golf Club. He stopped his machine and walked toward the "bundle" burning in the snow.

What he saw burning was the body of a woman.

Panic-stricken, Boyle flung himself into his car and roared at full speed into Cranford, where he hysterically informed the police of his discovery. Police Chief James Hennessey and fellow officers quickly went to the scene. The gasoline-soaked bundle was still ablaze. They rolled it back and forth in the snow and extinguished the flames.

The woman had been burned apparently beyond recognition. It was impossible to estimate her age. She had been shot in the head with a .32 caliber gun. The bullet had entered square in the center of the crown and coursed down through the neck and body and come to rest back of the eighth rib on the right side.

Dr. George W. Horre, assistant county physician, said she must have been shot while sitting or lying down, and that death had been instantaneous.

She had been dressed in inexpensive clothing, from which all the labels had been removed. Her feet were covered with a pair of black patent leather ties, of a design several years old, and a pair of brown goloshes. On the right shoe was a metal reinforcing clamp, or angle iron, intended to strengthen the junction of the heel and arch. The shoe had recently been resoled.

Other details duly noted were that the woman had some new bridge work on the left side of her upper jaw, and that the little finger of the left hand was malformed.

The charred remains were removed to the Elizabeth, N. J., morgue, pending identification. Abe J. David, prosecutor of Union county, assigned his assistant, Thomas B. Walsh, to take charge of the investigation, along with John A. Galatian, chief of detectives. Later on in the search, Pinkerton detectives, headed by William E. Wagner, were hired to assist the county officers.

But despite the most feverish police activity, the body remained unidentified.

Dozens of theories as to the motive were advanced from day to day, the most popular being that she had been "taken for a ride" by gangsters engaged in the interminable New Jersey liquor war. The burned face was rebuilt with wax in the hope that this might make identification easier. People poured into the morgue to view the body, but none of them could give her name.

Weeks passed. Thousands of circulars, describing the victim, the clothing, the articles of cheap jewelry found on the body, and particularly the shoes, were sent all over the country. The shoes were regarded as the best clew, for it was known that they had been manufactured by the Friedman-Shelby Shoe Company at their Hannibal, Mo., factory. The News sent circular letters to shoe dealers throughout the country in an effort to trace the pair found on the "torch" victim.

THE BREAK COMES AT LAST, APRIL 9.

But it was a slim chance. Carloads of shoes like these had been sold all over the east. It was not to be expected that a shoe clerk could recall the name, supposing he knew the name, of the woman to whom he had sold this particular pair months and months before the crime. But suppose she had come from a small town? In that event, it would not be so hopeless. There was the one hope of ever solving the case.

The break came at last on April 9, some six weeks after the murder. The long hunt ended at Greenville, Pa., where a dealer recalled that he had sold the shoes to the former Mrs. Mildred Mowry, a resident of Greenville, who had the previous summer married a Richard M. Campbell, of Baltimore, Md. Mrs. Campbell had not been seen nor heard from since about the middle of February.

Now let us follow the detectives along the trail that led from Greenville.

They learned that the woman, a native of Beaverdale, Pa., had married a steel worker named Ben Mowry, who had died in 1919. After his death she had moved to Greenville and studied practical nursing so that she might support herself. A strong, healthy, quiet woman, she had managed rather well at this profession and in the course of several years had been able to put some money away.

We can believe, however, that widowhood did not appeal to her and that she craved a home and husband.

Early in August, 1928, she surprised her friends by announcing suddenly that she was going to marry a "Dr. Campbell," with whom she had been corresponding for some time. None of her acquaintances in Greenville had ever met Campbell—for that matter, Mrs. Mowry herself did not meet him until several months after they began corresponding through a matrimonial bureau. She did not let her friends know about the matrimonial agency phase of the affair.

She married Campbell at Elkton, Md., on August 28, 1929, and the couple had journeyed to New Brunswick, N. J., where the bride cashed a treasurer's check for $1,000 at the National Bank of New Jersey. The police assumed that Campbell was with her and that he must have been known to the bank employes, otherwise she would not have been able to cash the check so readily.

Examining the marriage license at Elkton, the officers noted that the bridegroom had given an address in Yosemite street, Baltimore, and they discovered presently that the address was a vacant lot. The lot was owned, it developed, by one Henry Colin Campbell, of Westfield, N. J. The Westfield police reported that Henry Colin Campbell, a perfectly respectable and happily married civil engineer, had recently moved.

Mrs. Mildred Campbell had been in Greenville on February 1 and then left town, saying she was going to visit her husband in New York, where he ran a sanitarium. Detectives examining her effects in Greenville found letters containing a return address at 110 West 42d street, New York. The officers learned that "L. Campbell" had rented a desk there in December but had only been there a few times to gather up some letters.

All the evidence now gathered by the police tended to indicate that Campbell had made efforts to shake himself loose from the Greenville woman.

She had appeared at the 42d street address on January 10, it was learned, and waited around for him some time. When he did not appear, she had asked Louis Mirel, the man who rented desk space to Campbell, where she might find a place to stay in New York.

Mirel had suggested Laura Spelman Hall, a Y. W. C. A. in Abingdon square, but she did not appear at this place, it was stated there, until February 2, having come apparently direct from Greenville. She had stayed in New York, waiting for her husband, until February 21.

In the meanwhile Campbell, having learned from Mirel that his wife had been to see him, had changed his office address to a place on 5th avenue, above 42d street.

All this appears rather involved, but detective work in real life is not always so beautifully simple and direct as detective work in mystery books. In this case the officers had to go back step by step over the whole route, not only to trace the woman so as to establish her identity as the victim beyond question, but also to trace the murderer. Besides, it is always well to have plenty of evidence on tap when the time comes to confront the suspect.

To continue—

Detectives visiting the Laura Spelman Hall learned that, a few days before Mrs. Campbell left, an elderly man with prominent teeth and florid complexion had appeared there and asked for her, saying he was her husband. He had seemed irritated because she wasn't in and after waiting in the lobby some time he had jumped up and walked out. He had not come back.

IMPLORED CAMPBELL TO RETURN TO HER.

When Mrs. Campbell left on the 21st, she gave a Dover, Del., address as her forwarding address. Soon a letter came to the Hall, addressed to Campbell at the old 42d street address. It was forwarded to Dover but was returned to the Hall marked "Not Claimed." Detectives opened the letter and found that the woman had implored Campbell to come to her and threatened to kill herself if he didn't, adding that she would never go back and face her friends in Greenville.

And there the trail ended. The next time she was seen her flaming body was lighting

They Always Get Their M
Adventures of Red-Coa

Terse Reports From Every Corner of Vast Dominion Disclose Thrilling Exploits Such as Corporal Brunet's Capture of 42-Foot Schooner, and Constable McCallum's Subduing of Wild Man

By JASON BRADON

"THEY always get their man!" and how?

Up at Fort Pitt, Saskatchewan, a local character who had suffered some kind of brain storm was running amuck.

For some time previously he had terrorized the settlement by conducting himself in so violent a manner that it was suspected that he was insane, and his neighbors had become afraid to sleep nights.

They submitted to his eccentricities, however, until he fired some shots from a rifle at one of them. Then they asked for police protection from the Onion Lake detachment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and they got it pronto.

Here is how Constable J. W. McCallum handled the case as told in his official report of the case to his superior officer:

"I went to his house and found him standing in front of the door. I told him that I came to see him about this shooting affair, and he said he had nothing to do with it. I immediately called on Young, the aggrieved party, who identified Handel as the person who had fired the shots.

"Handel wheeled suddenly, jumped into the house, slammed and bolted the door, shouting from the inside that I had had no jurisdiction over him as I was a mounted policeman. That he had done nothing or done no harm to anyone, and that if he did the Saskatchewan Provincial Police would be there.

Flooded Him Out.

"There were one or two men of the district with me and we forced the door open, but Handel was entrenched in the cellar with a rifle. I remained there all night in the hope that he would surrender, in the meantime asking him to throw up his rifle out of the cellar, which he refused to do.

"In the afternoon of that day we made a chute and proceeded to fill the cellar with water from a nearby slough, in a last endeavor to get him out. Previously to that a rag on the end of a piece of wood, which was saturated with gas, was lit and pushed in the cellar for about two minutes' duration, but with no result.

"Water was poured into the cellar for the best part of the afternoon until it was almost full. But before it reached the height of the cellar Handel came up in a wet condition and submitted to arrest. He was allowed a change to clothing and a hot meal, and was taken before Henry Pritshott, J. P., at Freshman's Butte, and was committed for trial."

That is one typical example of how the "Mounties" get their man and how modest they are in telling of the daring and courageous acts they are frequently called upon to perform.

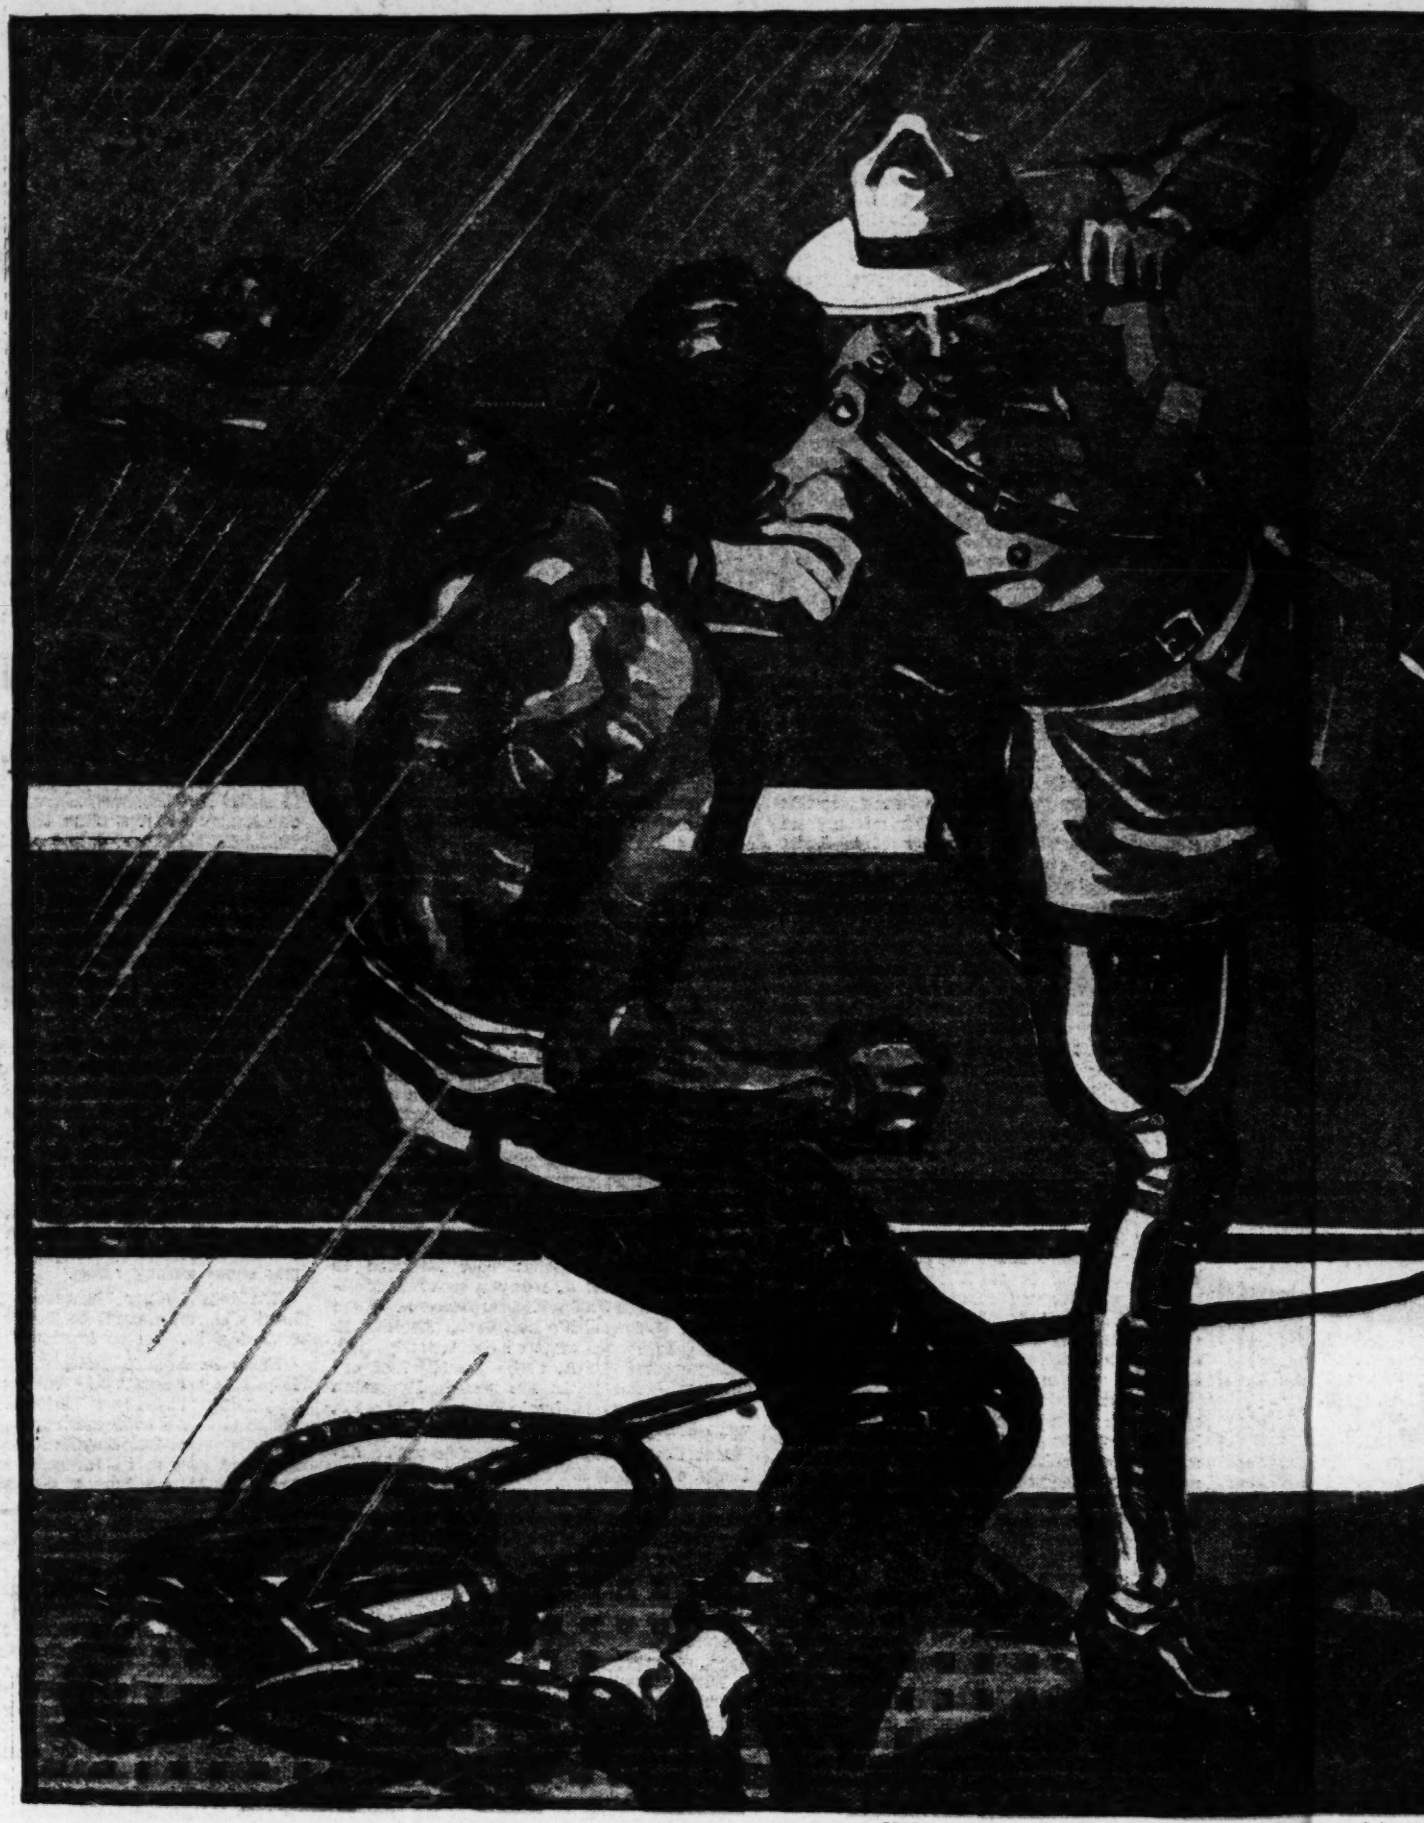

The account of the incident is taken from what is undoubtedly the greatest adventure story book of the year, which has just been published by the King's Printer at Ottawa with the unromantic title: "Annual Report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police."

There are only 141 pages within the blue paper covers of this volume, but most of them are devoted to extracts from the personal diaries of men engaged in the dangerous business of running down desperate criminals or making difficult winter patrols of hundreds of miles by dog team in the Arctic and sub-Arctic regions of northern Canada.

On the Line of Duty.

What they write of their exploits is couched in language so terse and reserved that the reader immediately gets the impression that they have carefully avoided any mention of personal hardships, dangers or difficulties encountered in the line of duty which might be construed as self-glorification or boastfulness.

So one is tempted to dramatize their reports and embellish them with adjectives as colorful as their uniforms. But that would be offensive to these gallant "Red Riders of the North," who carry law and order and relief far beyond the outposts of civilization, and consider danger, hardship and thrilling adventure as all in the day's work.

When Corporal Brunet insisted on searching

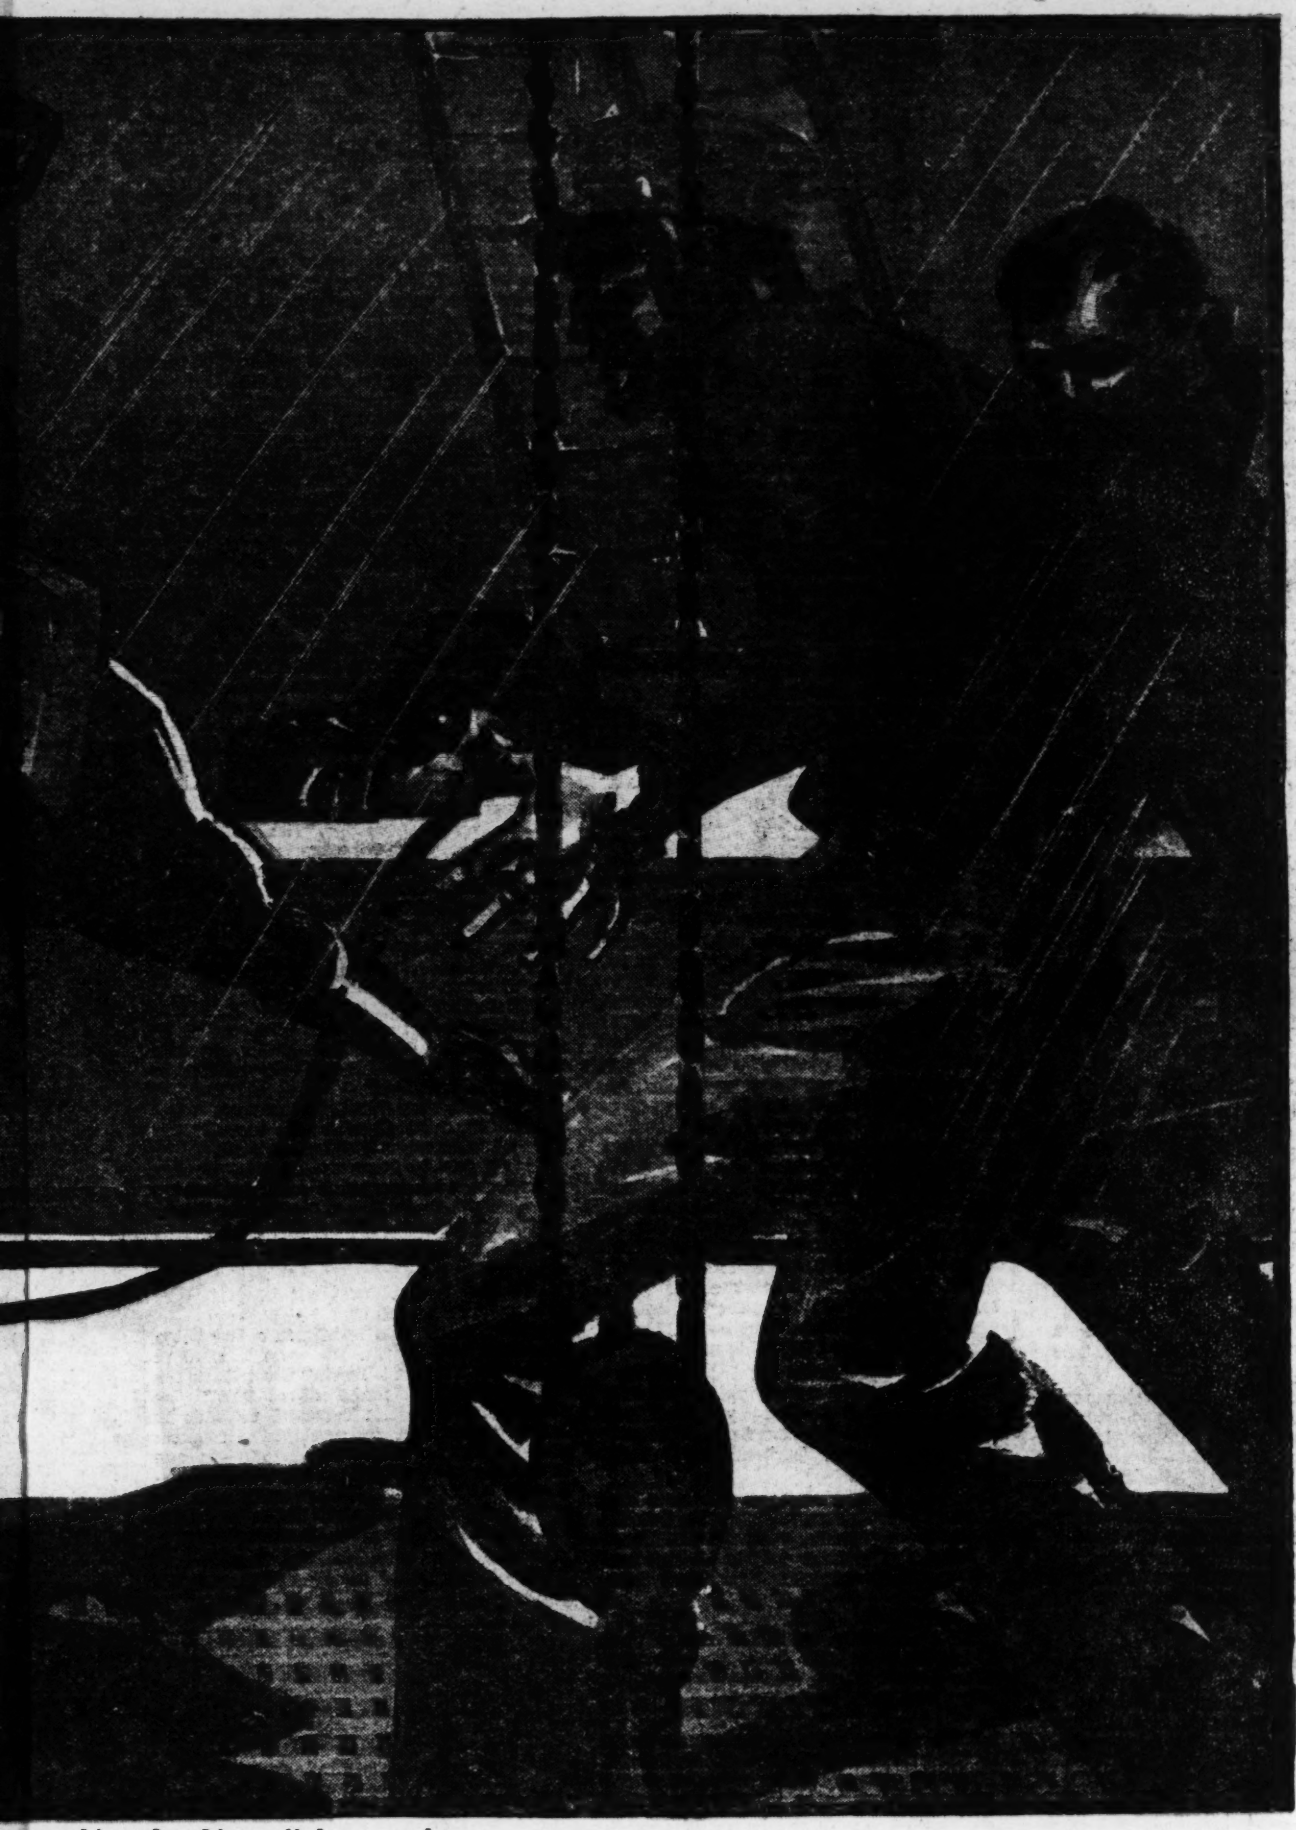

There is plenty of drama to be read between their laconic lines, however, and sometimes it is tragic. Take, for example, this report by Commissioner Cortlandt Starnes.

"On December 31, 1928, Sergeant R. H. Nicholson, in charge of the Lac du Bonnet detachment, was shot and mortally wounded while raiding an illicit still, thereby adding one more to the list of members of this force who have fallen in the discharge of duty.

"In company with Constable J. B. Watson, of the Manitoba Provincial Police, he visited the farm of one Eppinger, near Molson, upon a still in the bush, about a half from the house. The two app from different sides, Sergeant Nicho ing first and finding it in full operat by Eppinger and his wife.

"A rifle was nearby, standing agai and both Nicholson and Eppinger see rushed for it, to have reached it simu and to have struggled for it until th discharged, inflicting a terrible woun famous police force risk their lives to get their man and uphold the traditional reputation of the organization. It is also reported by Commissioner Starnes himself, probably because he wanted to give just a word of praise to the officer involved.

"A courageous performance by Corporal J. Brunet, in charge of the Bersimis detachment, resulted in the seizure of a 42-foot motor schooner which was smuggling liquor and selling to Indians, the arrest of several men, and the wounding of the captain of the vessel, who resisted search with great violence.

"On July 4, the vessel, which had a crew of six men, with one Phillipe Vaillancourt as captain, visited Bersimis, and liquor was sold to certain Indians. The schooner was anchored in the Bersimis river, about four miles from its entrance into the St. Lawrence, and about two miles from the usual landing place.

"Corporal Brunet had been absent from the village on business, but on his return in the evening he saw the vessel and suspected her purpose. About 10 o'clock at night he searched the reserve, found two Indians carrying bottles of liquor, arrested them, and learned that the liquor had been sold to them by a member of the crew of the schooner, whose name he obtained and whom he knew.

"He at once got a warrant for the arrest of the man, and a search warrant for the schooner, and set off in a launch, which was manned by Oscar Miller and his 16-year-old son, Auguste, to board the vessel. She was reached about 1 o'clock in the morning, and at the time it was raining and very dark.

"Four men were on deck, and two, one of whom was the man named in the warrant, were sleeping. Brunet first arrested this man, and placed him in the launch. He then sought out the captain and showed him his search warrant, but Vaillancourt refused to have his vessel searched and persisted in his refusal.

"On Corporal Brunet insisting on search, a fight ensued, principally between the policeman and Vaillancourt, but three of the crew joined in, assisting the captain, while the man already under arrest made two efforts to get back into the schooner. The Millers, father and son, with commendable public spirit, came to Corporal Brunet's aid.

"Two of the crew were knocked down, but the captain kept on fighting, and Brunet finally fired a shot in the air and then, on this having no effect, he shot Vaillancourt in the foot. Vaillancourt continued his resistance, but was overpowered along with the others.

"On search being made there were found over 40 gallons of liquor, two revolvers and a shot gun, all the weapons being loaded. Several cartridges in one pistol were nicked, suggesting that it had been snapped and the ammunition had misfired.

"Vaillancourt was sentenced on conviction for an infraction of the Customs Act to one year in jail. The three members of the crew who had resisted pleaded guilty to charges of selling liquor to Indians, and were sentenced to three months in jail, $300 fine, or three months additional in default of payment."

The Mounties do not make use of dogs except for transportation purposes in winter, but Commissioner Starnes tells of an interesting case in which a dog did a clever bit of detective work that resulted in the arrest of a man suspected of peddling dope.

"For some three or four years one Arthur Toole has engaged the attention of our detectives in Winnipeg, he being the largest wholesale distributor of drugs in Winnipeg, and perhaps in the West," states the commissioner.

"Many attempts were made to entrap him, both by our own force and by the city police, but until this year all failed owing to his cunning and caution. In September, 1929, however, an effective means of approach was found, and our detective managed to arrest him after making a sale, with marked money upon him, and also found a quantity of heroin in the house. Connected with Toole was a chain of cases, one of which had a tragic ending.

Tragic Ending.

"Some time before Toole's arrest he had hidden 30 ounces of heroin under a culvert in a country road some eight miles from Winnipeg, and owing to the sniffing of a dog around them the packages were found by some farmers, who did not know what they contained.

"One of them, a highly respectable man, gave a geant Nicholson's thigh, from which he died in a few hours.

"Constable Watson arrived about the time the shot was fired and attended to Sergeant Nicholson, taking off his own shirt to form a tourniquet and working in his undershirt, though the temperature was more than 20 degrees below zero. His humane efforts resulted in his contracting a severe illness.

"Both the Manitoba Provincial Police and our own force sent parties to the scene, and in the forenoon of New Year's Day Eppinger, who had fled into the bush on Sergeant Nicholson's fall, was found in hiding and arrested. While Sergeant Nicholson was being tended by Constable Watson, Eppinger returned to the scene, dismantled the still and hid the parts, hid the rifle, and tried to obliterate the pool of blood. The rifle and most of the still, however, were found. He was found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to five years' imprisonment."

Such is the matter-of-fact way in which an heroic sacrifice is recorded. And here is another case showing how the members of this worldswer. Outward evidence proved that they had been disturbed while enjoying an orgy of bully beef as supplied to the B. E. F.

That the presence of Harley and Freddie provided them with more embarrassment than satisfaction was apparent by the extreme diffidence with which they presented their rifles and a subsequent discussion as to what they were to do with the 'verdamnt' officers now they had captured them.

The debate as to their future disposition proceeded to an accompaniment of nods and grunts and expressions of disapproval.

"But the orders were precise," one man insisted. "All prisoners were to be taken to Fourgh La Rivierre."

"But not a man of us knows where Fourgh lies," was the retort.

It was then Harley spoke for the first time.

"I can show you the way."

The trio looked at him in surprise. Raising his hand Harley pointed at Villers Guislan.

"But that isn't——" Freddie began, and stopped at a glare from Harley.

"Hmph!" grunted one of the men. "That would seem no place to go."

Harley laughed sourly.

"Is this the way you obey orders?" he asked. "If a British soldier were ordered to go to a certain place he would go if shells were falling as thick as rain."

Although this vainglorious announcement had some effect, it did not materially shake the reluctance they shared to expose themselves to unnecessary hazard.

"One could wait until the barrage lifts," one of them supposed.

"Or one could wait for a court martial," said Harley.

"He is right," said the oldest of the three. "If we were found here it would be hard to explain. Please, God, things may be quieter when we arrive."

But as they approached the little town the barrage showed no signs of lifting. The nervousness of their escort communicated itself through the points of the bayonets that pricked the fabric of Harley's tunic and Freddie's.

"What's the idea," Freddie whispered with a tremor of nervousness in his voice.

"God knows, mad enough," was the reply. "Some of these blokes may get killed. It's our one chance."

"I guessed that was in your head," Freddie nodded, "but we may cop it ourselves."

"No," said Harley, with sudden force. "I'm not going to die yet—I feel that. I'm going to live and marry Joan, understand, understand?"

"By God," said Freddie, "she'd love you for this, old son. It's rank crazy lunacy but, by God, she'd love you for it."

As they entered the outskirts of the village their escort halted automatically. The whole place was crackling with fireworks like a gala night on the Riviera. The air hummed with flying fragments and the row was such that they could hardly hear themselves speak.

Harley turned with the light of adventure in his eyes.

"What are we waiting for?" he demanded.

As he spoke there was a splitting crash and one of the men sprawled at his feet.

For an instant the two who remained stood indecisively, then one of them cried,

"If this is Fourgh la Riviere you can enter it alone," and seizing Freddie Miller by the wrist he started to drag him around the corner.

"Drop that," cried Freddie and struggled to be free. The other man drew back his bayonet to lunge.

Harley had taken a step forward when with a clatter like the smashing of a thousand dinner plates an avalanche of tiles, lath and plaster showered down overwhelmingly and brought him to the ground. One two, three, four, the shells crackled and at the fourth crash the light of the sky was blotted out. The wreckage of a house enveloped him. He tried to move his legs but they were pinioned by a roof timber. He tried to shout but his throat was choked with dust. Waves of insensibility were creeping over him, deadening pain and consciousness. He rolled his head and through a gap in the wreckage saw Freddie Miller standing alone in the roadway. Freddie was rocking to and fro. His hands were clasped to his forehead like a man striving to remember something. Blood was running between his fingers. His face somehow, had become like the face of a child—a lost, lost child. In a lull between shell bursts Harley heard him whining.

"What I am looking for—looking for?"

There was no answer.

"Freddie, Freddie," Harley croaked, but the barrage was roaring again and smothered his voice.

Still holding his head and moving furtively Freddie tottered out of sight.

"No go, Joan," said Harley. "No go."

And passed into unconsciousness.

A little after dawn the following day, a man whose forehead was clotted with dried blood stumbled into Seige Park headquarters and sat down lumpily on the floor.

"Mother av God," cried Major Cosmo Regan, "If it isn't Freddie Miller."

"Is that who I am," cried the man, and began to laugh.

He was still laughing when they put him on the hospital train for Boulougne.

* * * *

Joan did not read the casualty lists. That was a job for people who didn't believe—who didn't know. If they found a name in the lists it was their fault for looking. One had to believe or anything might happen.

It was Paula who brought the news. She arrived after midnight—after the front door had been bolted and the household was in bed.

Joan came down in pajamas.

Paula was facing the embers of a dying fire. Her arms stretched out along the mantel shelf. She looked crucified.

"Well," said Joan, from the doorway.

Paula did not turn.

"On the table,' she whispered huskily.

Joan picked up the cutting and read,

"Temp. Captain Harley Everard Trevelyan, R. A., missing, believed killed."

"Well," Joan repeated.

"Missing—believed killed." The words were barely audible.

"Who believes that," said Joan. "Who believes that? Not I." There was not a tremor in her voice. "I should have known,' she added.

Paula turned. Her face was gray as ash.

"First David and now —"

"Stop," said Joan. "What's the use? Here."

Going to the sideboard she poured some brandy in a glass and gave it to Paula. Then:

"I tell you I should have known," she repeated

Something in the words—a proprietorship—the suggestion of a stronger, surer instinct nettled Paula to a flash of defiance.

"We both loved him. You were not the only one."

"Yes, we both loved him," Joan answered slowly. "And can go on loving him. Do you understand?"

But Paula had relaxed again and her head went slowly from side to side.

"I knew," she muttered, "as soon as I picked up the paper I knew. It felt cold in my hand."

In spite of her courage the chill of those words crept like icy fingers down Joan's spine.

"That was not the reason," she said. "Too much dope—too many drugs. How can you expect to keep your head up?"

A streak of angry red came into Paula's cheeks.

"That's a lie—a lie."

For even the milder forms of narcotics are robbers of the truth.

"A lie," she repeated. Who told you?"

"No one. I saw you myself. At the Prisoners—I saw you."

Paula licked her lips.

"I remember," she nodded. "It was a headache. I had a headache that day. The pain was awful—like a nightmare."

Joan lit a cigaret and threw it unsmoked into the fire. Nothing was to be gained by quarrelling—by reproaches. She wanted to be alone—to think things out—to reassure herself. Faith was so hard to sustain in company with an unbeliever. The text of a sermon indifferently remembered was echoing in her brain. It was—what did it say? "Hold that fast which thou hast that no man take thy crown." That was it almost. That was the meaning. Belief was her crown, her support, and Paula was trying to rob her of it.

"I'm sorry," she said, and with a gesture that was gauche in its sincerity, she bumped a fist on Paula's shoulder. "I know what you've lost—and how awful it must be for you. But can't you hang on to what is left?"

Paula shook her head.

"No, I can't. I'm tired of cheating myself. For months I've done nothing else. For months did I say—for years. The war will be over, I told myself, before David can be called up. Harley has a charmed life, I told myself, nothing can touch him—and God will reward love with love. All that and more I told myself and forced my imagination to accept it as the truth. You—you are only just beginning to play that game—the game of make belief that cheats you every time. Sometimes I've sat for hours with my fingers pressed to my eyes, turning bullets by will power—turning them aside. Forging shields, I used to call it. Forging shields!" Her voice broke in a hard cracked laugh. "God! A lot of use it's been."

Joan put out a hand and helped her to rise.

"I want you to go," she said. "We are no help to each other. We'd be better alone."

Like some one in a dream Paula suffered herself to be led from the room.

As the front door was opened air raid signals began to pop and bang over the black roofs of London.

Paula stiffened in every muscle.

"It was in a raid he first came to you," she said. "It's only fitting he——"

"O, go," said Joan, and stamped her foot. Looking like a bird of ill omen Paula muffled her face in the collar of her cloak and flitted across the square.

An old British warm of Freddie's was hanging in the hall. Joan took it from the peg and put it on. Going to the kitchen she rummaged in a drawer for a screw driver. Presently she climbed to the top of the house with a flight of short steps on her shoulder. Old Rogers had not made a good job of screwing down the trap door that gave access to the leads. By the time Joan had removed the last screws and scrambled through the trap the air raid was in full swing.

"Please God," said Joan, her gaze traveling up and beyond the tall rays of the searchlights. "Please God, if I am wrong in my belief, please God try and arrange something for me."

But although bombs roared sullenly and fragments of broken shell cases rained down from the heavens, not so much as the tiniest splinter fell upon the roof where for an hour Joan stood motionless.

The storm whirled away into the distance to die out in a twinkle of stars. From the street below came the clear notes of a bugle.

"All clear."

"All clear," Joan repeated, filled her lungs deep with the night air and walked firmly, towards the trap door.

She met her mother on the bathroom landing.

"It wasn't much," said Lady Miller.

"No," Joan echoed. "Not much after all."

Lady Miller peered at her.

"You look so funny, dear," she said, "as if you'd been frightened but had got over it."

"I was and I have got over it," Joan nodded. "It's in the paper that Harley is missing and believed killed."

Lady Miller did not say anything for a moment but when at last she spoke she was inspired.

"You shouldn't have gone on the roof, Joan. You know he doesn't like you to."

"He doesn't like it," Joan repeated, and began to cry for happiness.

"There, there," said Lady Miller, making a pillow for Joan's head. "I am sure Captain Trevelyan had done quite as much fighting as any one could want. We know, don't we, that the prisoners' camps aren't as bad as they're painted, and a nice rest will do him all the good in the world."

* * * *

In the weeks that followed Joan's belief had little support from outside sources.

There was Freddie to think about, too.

Freddie, who was lying at the Third London General hospital, with a nasty dent in his forehead and a gap in his memory.

He talked incessantly but incoherently—a jumble of disconnected words and sentences—traversing a diversity of subjects but focusing upon no one in particular.

Joan sitting beside the bed tried to make sense of it all.

The M. O. in charge of the case was hopeful. He said pressure was the trouble. A bit of bone pressing on the brain. Duesley was going to take a look at him and would probably operate. Marvelous chap, Duesley.

"When?" Joan asked.

"He's in France until the end of the month. When he gets back. He saw your brother the night he arrived and told us to keep him quiet for a bit."

* * * *

A letter from Major Regan of the Seige Park shed a little light on Freddie's doings.

"Pulled out a couple of guns and got left behind trying to save the rest. He seems to have wriggled through the new German lines after dark. I've put in a strong recommendation and it won't be my fault if he doesn't get something pretty good out of the hat."

The war office could supply no further news of Harley.

One night, three weeks later, when Joan returned from the hospital, Rogers told her that Major Evan Fawlk had been waiting in the drawing room for half an hour.

"Tell him I'll come directly," she said.

But before going up Joan sponged her face and drank a glass of cold water.

Fawlk was standing when Joan entered the room. He had been standing for the last half hour. He was proud of his height and believed in first impressions.

As she approached he bowed very formally.

"It is so long since we last met," he said, "that I hardly expect you will remember me."

"Yes, I do," said Joan.

He bowed again and was aware as he did so that his heart was beating unusually fast. She was lovelier than his memory's portrait of her. The pictures in the illustrated papers had only hinted at her beauty. It would be difficult, he felt, to sustain the role he had set himself of sympathetic friend.

"You will understand, I hope, why I am here," he said. "In the battery I once commanded you had a very great friend."

"Once commanded?" Joan echoed.

Fawlk nodded.

"Before the debacle of a few weeks ago. Since then I have been attending a course at Woolwich."

"I see, I didn't know," said Joan. "I didn't know the battery was lost altogether."

"We were only able to save two of the guns."

"We? O, yes. My brother——"

"Yes, he did very well, I believe, in trying circumstances. I am sorry to hear he was hurt, but glad it was no worse than that."

"You believe," said Joan. "You were not there to see what happened?"

Fawlk shook his head.

"To my undying regret, no. We had orders to retire. There was no reason to suppose the tractors could arrive in time. The roads, too, were choked with—you can imagine for yourself what a disorganized retreat is like."

"Then no one was left at the battery when the tractors arrived."

"In effect, no. We had had a number of casualties. It was an ugly business, Miss Miller, a business that scarcely bears thinking upon."

But Joan was thinking—thinking hard.

"Was Captain Trevelyan among the wounded?" she asked.

Fawlk rubbed his chin as though uncertain how to answer.

"Not to my knowledge. You will understand the whole affair was over almost before one realized it had begun. Trevelyan was in his quarters. The position was under heavy shell fire. I personaly called him to come at once."

"Yes, and then?"

"He answered me—but after that I never saw him."

"What do you mean?"

"Just that. I never saw him again. He did not report for duty. I had a hundred and one things to do and only a few seconds to do them in."

Joan jumped suddenly to her feet.

"You mean he stayed under cover?"

Fawlk held up a hand in protest.

"I beg you to form no such conclusion. Trevelyan was a capable and, as I know from personal experience, a valiant officer."

"Then why say——"

"I have not said so. Neither do I suggest it. If Trevelyan stayed under cover he did not do so voluntarily."

"I don't understand."

"Miss Miller," said Fawlk, in a low voice, "we were not dug in. We were billeted in the ruins of a farm. During the attack the building suffered many direct hits." He allowed his words a moment to sink in before proceeding. "I would give a great deal to avoid saying this—to you—to any one who was fond of Trevelyan—but knowing him as I did I can only conceive of one cause that would have prevented Trevelyan from carrying out his duties."

"I see," said Joan, steadily. "Yes, I see."

"Had there been time I would have satis-

IN 1821 MEXICO GAINED HER INDEPENDENCE IN THE SAME YEAR A PARTY OF MEXICANS MET SOME AMERICAN TRADERS ON THE PLAINS AND INVITED THEM TO SANTA FE

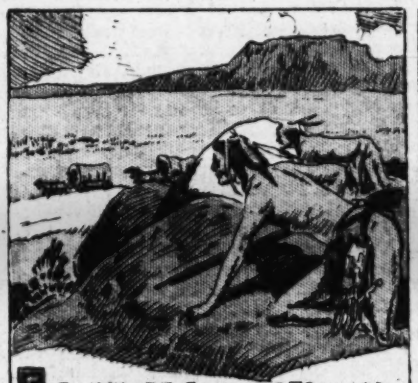

IN SANTA FE THE AMERICANS WERE WELCOMED CORDIALLY AND MADE A HANDSOME PROFIT ON THEIR SMALL STOCK OF GOODS. THIS WAS THE BEGINNING OF A BRISK TRADE ACROSS THE PLAINS. ——•

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, WAS THE STARTING POINT FOR THE TRADERS, WHO TRAVELLED ALONE AS FAR AS COUNCIL GROVE ON THE EDGE OF THE INDIAN COUNTRY, THEIR WAGONS LOADED WITH CLOTH AND OTHER MANUFACTURED ARTICLES.

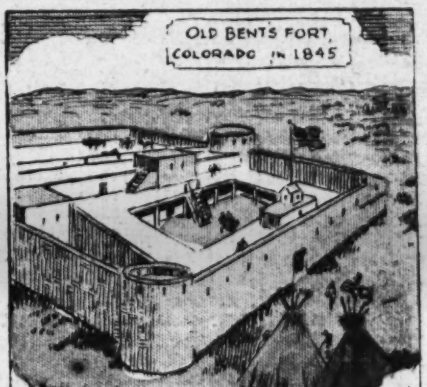

AT COUNCIL GROVE THE TRADERS WOULD ASSEMBLE, FORM A CONVOY, ELECT A CAPTAIN AND MAKE FINAL PREPARATIONS FOR THE LONG AND DANGEROUS JOURNEY OVER THE SANTA FE TRAIL. —•

FOR MOST OF THE WAY THE TRAIL LED THROUGH THE LANDS OF FIERCE INDIANS,—PAWNEES, ARAPHOES, KIOWAS AND COMANCHES,—EVER WATCHING FOR A CHANCE TO MASSACRE THE TRADERS AND PLUNDER THE WAGONS. ——•

A SUDDEN BURST OF FIRING FROM AMBUSH, BLOOD-CURDLING WHOOPS, A WHIRLWIND CHARGE OF PAINTED RIDERS AND THE NEXT MOMENT THE TRADERS WOULD BE FIGHTING FOR THEIR LIVES.

FORTIFIED STATIONS AND MILITARY POSTS WERE ESTABLISHED ALONG THE TRAIL. BENT'S FORT, WITH ITS LOOPHOLED ADOBE WALLS AND ROUND TOWERS WAS THE MOST PICTURESQUE. —•

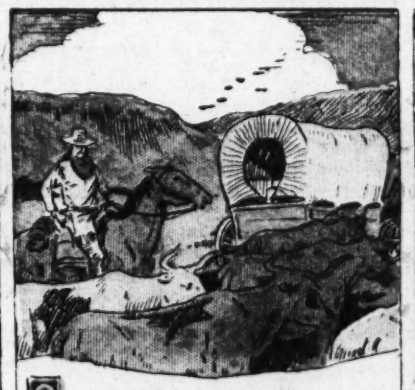

COMING IN SIGHT OF SANTA FE THE CONVOYS BROKE UP AND THE TRADERS RACED MADLY TOWARD THE CITY, EACH TRYING TO BE THE FIRST TO REACH THE MARKET PLACE.

The Sorrows of Tweetyman

ing of an ice cream machine in a catalog connected with the pumps of A. & E. Tweetyman and realized that it had been finished and had passed into the keeping of his brother.

She was really angry. The incident raised acutely the whole question of his brother in relation to his possibilities. Something must be done! She invited his brother to dinner, and on the principle of Greek cut Armenian, exerted all her wiles to get her father to meet him. It was seldom, indeed, that Nicholas would budge from his fireside, his papers, and his evening journal, except for those public functions at which he invariably made the best speech of the evening. But, though he had no declared preferences among his children, Marian was secretly his favorite; and he came.

The evening was one long battle for the soul, or rather the possibilities, of Tweetyman, and he remained completely unconscious of the fact. The whole difficulty with the man, indeed, arose from the impossibility of making him realize his own sorrows.

Here he was, with his real gifts, wholly at the beck and call of that despoiler, his brother, and incapable of resenting it. Here, if the battle went against his brother, he would be—as Marian realized before the night was out—wholly at the beck and call of Nicholas' companies, and incapable of profiting by it. For a side of her father's character that she had never realized, was revealed to Marian that evening: If he secured and employed Edward, it would be as a servant to his companies and not as a son-in-law—no nepotism for him! In other words, Edward, the inventor, would jump out of one sorrow into another just as deep, and do it without a sigh. Marian had seldom been more disillusioned.

The net result of the affair was that Nicholas parted from Albert with an added respect for him, and less respect for Edward. When Marian got her husband to bed she did not blow out the candle, but lay on her side and looked at him. He was lying on his back, with his temple bones extremely hollowed, and a slight smile under the wisps of his mustache. Something Nicholas had said in connection with the watering of engines on his railway had started his inventivity, and he was already halfway towards an improvement. In that dim light he looked almost too saintlike, above his flannel nightgown. Marian was moved; there was charm in the man in spite of the sorrows of which he was so unconscious, and, after all, she had married him for love.

"Edward," she said at last, "you seem very far away. After all, I am your wife."

"Ah! my dear!" he said, and turned towards her.

She took full advantage of the movement. After all, he had other possibilities, and the evening need not be entirely wasted.

The result, Patricia was, in 1896, already 12 years old, and to her father one of his best inventions. The years had contracted his girth and increased that of his brother, now an alderman. The aspirations of Marian had remained unfulfilled. True, Nicholas now allowed his children 500 pounds a year a piece, and Edward was drawing 700 pounds a year from his brother, but what was this to a comely and fashionable young matron?

The sorrows of her Tweetyman seemed to her more, and to him, if anything, less noticeable than ever. For he was engaged on what he regarded as, so far, his prime invention, a specie of pump for the evacuation of goods from Cross Channel and other steamers. He was almost blue-white now and perfectly happy. His cheeks were even more hollow than his temple bones, and Marian had almost despaired of his possibilities. So much so, that her old feeling against his brother had changed to a sort of regard for his possessive genius. That she had remained entirely faithful to her man of sorrows says much for his charm, and the sterling qualities of a Forsyte.

The year of 1895 will long be remembered for its weather. After opening with a frost of some two months' duration, it broke into a passion of warmth and life which lingered on into the late autumn. A bone shaking automobile rattled people around at the South Kensington exhibition, bicycles were all the rage, the river Thames was covered with punts, young matrons went astray.

That Marian felt the temper of the year cannot be denied, but to say that she had anything but the most domestic intentions in what has now to be related, would not be true. As Edward approached the finish of his momentous invention, she approached her Waterloo. It was surely now or never, if his possibilities were ever to be capitalized, and his sorrow abated! And she conceived a plan which for daring and realism was, indeed, worthy of a daughter of Nicholas. To snatch her Edward out of the jaws of sorrow she proceeded to lay deliberated siege to Albert. Though an alderman, he was still a bachelor, a man of full habit and much red blood, in every respect the reverse of her poor Edward.

She besieged him with little dinners, after which she would place him with his cigar in a very easy chair; and send Edward up to his invention. Sitting well within Albert's view in an evening dress admirably cut to display her charms, she would soothe and incite him with conversation bordering on sex; the scandal of the year (that year fortunately very considerable), the latest dancer, this novel, that play.

From this it was easy to pass to the playing of picquet, a game during which the knees of opponents can, with a little care, be made to touch. Nor was it many days before she perceived with a well simulated surprise that the virile Albert was smouldering. Her duty was then plain. She threw with circumspection just enough cold water on him; performed just sufficiently the function of the wet blanket; watched him fume and then begin to go out, and lit him again with her eyes and knees.

After many evenings of this careful preparation she felt that to whatever lead she gave he would respond adequately; and her only fear was that he would respond before she gave it. This, though it might not be altogether unpleasant, would defeat the truly domestic object she had in view, namely, that Edward should discover her in his arms. She wished to synchronize this discovery by Edward so far as possible with the actual completion of his invention. For she reasoned thus: Unless he had finished it he might be so upset that he would never finish it; whereas, if he had finished it she would beg him to take her right away from this man, his brother, to have nothing more to do with him, and to go straight into Featherstone's firm on his own terms with his new invention.

It was essential to get Edward to realize that Albert was violently in love with her and that he would never believe unless he saw it for himself. She had already prepared Featherstone's firm, which was indeed monetarily composed by Charles Godmore; and she had prepared Albert. It now remained to prepare Edward. This caused her much reflection.

The room where Edward wrestled with his inventive fancy was at the top of the house and the problem was how to get him down to the drawingroom so that he could surprise her in the arms of Albert without going up to fetch him. It was some time before she hit on the solution—simple when thought of, like all great solutions—she would hide the model. She calculated that it would take him two minutes to get upstairs and moon around, finding that it was gone. Another three minutes to search and return to the drawingroom to ask her what could have happened to it. If then she touched Albert off four minutes after Edward went upsteirs she would be fairly safe.

It was not till the morning of the longest day that Edward, singing like a wren in his bath, announced to her that he had completed the model of his invention. Looking at his emaciated form, she said dryly: "And high time too."

After breakfast she wired to Albert (telephones were not yet installed) to come and dine that evening. Having carefully ordered a heating meal she awaited the crisis with a fluttering heart. All went well during dinner, even to the touching of her foot by Albert, to which she did not respond, so that his eyes became more than ever like the bull's in connection with Europa. She brought up the subject of the new invention and suggested to Edward that after dinner he should go up and bring the model down.

Sitting there opposite her, his face, though hollow and almost blue, had the shining happiness of one about to enter heaven; and a certain compunction seized on her for the shock she was going to give him. "It's for his good," she thought, and passed the tip of her toe across Albert's instep. Dear Edward, how blind he was! When, in the drawingroom they had partaken of coffee, she said: "Now, Edward!" and looked at the clock. As Edward left the room she left the sofa and moved towards the clock. It was of ormolu, a wedding present from her Uncle Roger, and stood on the mantlepiece.

"Albert," she said, "come here! I want your opinion on this clock."

The alderman rose. Through her lashes she could see the added flush on his fleshy face and his quivering lips that almost seemed to slobber. He stood beside her and with her eyes on the clock Marian pointed out its period. When exactly four minutes had elapsed her straining ears caught a sound on the stairs and she moved awkwardly, so that her white shoulder came in contact with his chest. The rest was automatic; she found herself face to face with him, his arms around her waist and his lips inclining for her lips. She reined back and his mouth came forward, reaching for her neck. All was as it should be. Then the door opened and there stood Patricia in her dressing gown.

"Mummy," came her treble cry, "daddy's lost his—O!" She vanished and with a sensation as of vertigo Marian heard her shriller:

"Daddy, daddy! Quick! Uncle Albert's biting mummy's neck!"

Then it was that Marian showed her breeding. With inimitable presence of mind she lost it and fell on the sofa in one of those dead faints which are so difficult to see through. Edward, attended by the scared Patricia, found her with Albert standing by and running his fingers through his somewhat scant but well pomatumed hair.

"Here, I say!" he said, "she's fainted;" and, with a certain aplomb, added: "It's the heat."

They revived her with some difficulty and on Edward's arm she went up to bed. Albert departed.

"If Albert hadn't caught me," she said on the stairs, "I should have fallen badly; it's lucky he's so strong. Patricia, Daddy's model is in the top cupboard. I put it there for safety, and forgot to tell him."

Three days later the model was patented by A. and E. Tweetyman. Edward had seen nothing. Patricia, who had seen everything, was young and easily gulled, but for some days Marian's manner to her offspring, who had spoiled it all, was somewhat sharp. Her defeat had been so signal that, like the sensible woman she was, she accepted it completely. Edward was hopeless! She gave him up. A man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief, who, until he died of it, would never know what manner of man he was. As for Albert, she gave him up, too. With difficulty Edward noticed that he was never asked to dinner again.

It was in a mood of Forsytean humor, one day, that she told the story of her defeat to her sister Euphemia, whose squeaks on the occasion were notable; and through this source it became current on Forsythe 'Change.

WHEN JUSTICE TRIUMPHED

up the snow-covered countryside on the road to Cranford.

The woman was definitely identified as the former Mildred Mowry on the morning of April 11 by two friends from Greenville, Mrs. H. G. Dodds and Mrs. John Straub. That evening half the detective force of the country gathered near No. 471 Madison avenue, Elizabeth, within a few blocks of the morgue where the body had lain for almost six weeks, and waited for Henry Colin Campbell, that very respectable civil engineer, to come home to his wife and kiddies.

He appeared shortly after dusk, a slight, gray-haired, nervous-acting man of 60. Before he could enter the house, two detectives, Wagner of the Pinkerton agency and County Detective Lombardo, stepped up to him and seized him by the arms. He made no struggle. He didn't even look surprised. He stood still while they took a .32 caliber revolver from his pocket and then went off with them to the court house.

Five minutes after he arrived, he confessed the murder.

Incredible, was it not? Here was an apparently prosperous business man, the father of a married daughter and three other children, the youngest less than two years old, who had been highly regarded in his community—the self-confessed perpetrator of one of the ghastliest horrors of recent years!

He said in his confession that after several months of correspondence he and the woman finally met in Washington, D. C., in May, 1928. Their next meeting was in August, at the Reading railway station in Philadelphia. They drove from Philadelphia to Elkton, where they were married on the 28th, and then drove around for two days, stopping overnight in roadhouses.

Then, since there was no home they could both go to, as he explained it, they parted, she to return to Greenville and he to his home in Westfield. He said that the $1,000 check was deposited in the bank in New Brunswick in a joint account. From then on they corresponded, he stated, though he made no mention of how she had pleaded with him to return to her. The confession, from the time he called at the Laura Spelman Hall in New York, continues:

"I went to the Laura Spelman Hall and, failing to see her, wrote to her, and we met in the Broad Street station in Philadelphia on February 21. We drove from there to Dover, Del., in my car and stopped at the Richardson hotel. The next day we drove around and finally went back to Philadelphia, arriving there about 9 p. m. We had supper in Philadelphia and then took the road through Reading to New Jersey, passing through Westfield.

"We had trouble with the car on the way back. We arrived on the outskirts of Cranford about 4 a. m. All the way up she had been pestering me to get me to turn in somewhere for the night. And I decided I would have to get rid of her, as I could not support two homes.

DOZING ON THE SEAT, CAMPBELL SLEW HER.

"As we were nearing Cranford, she was dozing on the seat beside me in the coupe. I pulled out my .32 automatic and fired one shot through her head, killing her instantly.

"I drove on about two or three hundred yards, stopped by the side of the road and pulled her out of the machine. I got some gas from a can in the rumble seat, poured it over her clothes, pulled her skirts over her head, and set a match to it. I then turned the car around and drove to my home in Westfield."

He insisted he had not planned to kill her; it was just a sudden impulse. "I'm sorry for my wife," he said, puffing nervously on a cigarette. He did not appear to be sorry for Mrs. Mowry.

His youthful wife, the former Rosalie McReady he had married in Chicago in 1914, simply would not believe that Campbell had done this fearful deed. "There's some terrible mistake," she said. "He was kind to the children and never hurt a soul. He was a home-loving man, with us almost every night." She said she would certainly stick by him, regardless of what he confessed to or what the police said about him.

Campbell's true past—or some of it—came to light on April 15, when he admitted that his real name was Henry Close, that he had married, usually bigamously, six women, that at one time in 1914 he had been engaged to five women at the same time, while he was working in Omaha, Neb., and that, years before, he had lived with three women at the same time in New York.

All in all, a most astounding record of seductions and bigamies.

The trial, which opened before Supreme Court Justice Clarence E. Case on June 10, was an anti-climactic bit of routine business, for no man was ever more inevitably doomed to the electric chair. Campbell had been reported dying a week before the trial, but had been declared fit to stand the ordeal and no delay had been granted. He sat quietly in his chair, looking very pallid, staring straight ahead through rimless glasses.

Prosecutor David quickly completed his overwhelming case. As the mass of evidence piled up, the white-haired defendant seemed to become bowed under its weight, and he blinked continually in a frightened way.

But he seemed to take heart when, the next morning, he ascended the stand and made his desperate effort to stave off the inevitable. His answers to the questions of his attorney, Francis A. Gordon, were well considered and delivered slowly and concisely.

He gave this reason for writing to several matrimonial agencies. He insisted that the only thing he wanted from the agency was a business partner.

He said he never had any intention of killing Mrs. Mowry and that he had no recollection of shooting her and of burning her body. (Our old friend, the everything-went-blank defense.) He didn't go to the police and tell them that something had happened because "I couldn't get things collected in my mind."

Mrs. Campbell gave the testimony that wives of murder defendants always seem to give—that in former years they had been very happy together, but he had changed of late years, taken to acting strangely; his health and mind seemed to have been affected; he had frequent headaches and could not sleep.

All of which culminated in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. The jury returned the verdict on the 13th after four hours deliberation. Justice Case immediately sentenced the prisoner to death in the electric chair.

The usual interminable period elapsed between the sentence and the execution. Not until April 17, 1930, did Justice grant Campbell an audience with death in the execution chamber of Trenton. His wife visited him two hours before the end and he went to his doom with his eyes tightly closed. He had to be hoisted into the chair.

The Nancy Harts of LaGrange

BY EDNA ARNOLD COPELAND.

A MILITARY company of women known as "The Nancy Harts" was organized in LaGrange, Ga., during the War Between the States. In the archives of Georgia they are recorded as State Militia of that period. The uniforms of the women soldiers consisted of a tightly fitted jacket and a loose skirt, which barely escaped the top of their boots. They were grey in color and the buttons which adorned the jackets were painted to represent those worn on their husbands' and sweethearts' uniforms.

It is recorded that a few members of this company were not very good shots, and while target practicing it was no unusual thing for a neighbor's cow or horse to come up from the pasture limping from the effects of a stray bullet.

The company's collection of weapons was of a miscellaneous nature. They used heirlooms and many implements that were discarded by older members of their families. The Nancy Harts drilled regularly, and when marching down Main street they were gazed upon with awe by those who did not approve of their tactics, and applauded by those who possessed an understanding heart and mind.

* * * *

Early one afternoon, much to the surprise of the women soldiers, a messenger announced, "The Yankees are coming." At a moment's notice the Georgia Militia of women formed, command was given and 50 strong marched unafraid to the tune of Dixie to meet their enemies.

A short distance away a band could be heard playing "Marching Through Georgia," and to this tune the Yankees, 800 strong, were marching down upon LaGrange. It was a most peculiar coincidence that the colonel in command bore the same name as that of the beautiful little Georgia town.

After Colonel LaGrange had viewed the company of young women, who seemed so charming and unafraid, he marched his men on, leaving behind him the promise that the homes in this lovely little southern town should be spared and the inhabitants could forever rest in peace.

Georgia has paid many tributes to the bravery of Nancy Hart, "the war woman." The first to honor America's bravest Revolutionary heroine was this company of women from LaGrange, Ga.

NANCY HART

* * * *

The accompanying picture of Nancy Hart, which was presented to the author of this sketch by a descendant of this unique character, is being widely circulated by different correspondents. Not once have they given the owner credit for the loan of this rare likeness of the heroine, although it has illustrated their sketches in a very fitting manner.

This picture is claimed to be a true likeness of the Revolutionary heroine, and proves most conclusively that she was not as "bad on the eyes" as some historians would have us believe. A description given of her appearance by one who knew her reads as follows:

"When I last saw her she was about 45 years of age. Her blue eyes were not crossed and her hair was light brown, streaked with grey. She was rather high tempered, but kind and domestic. A brave patriot."

Another has said, "She was an angel of a patriot, but a devil of a wife."

These are sayings of men. The last lines quoted must have been inspired by a lovely red-headed wife, as red hair and high temper are closely allied.

"'Why touch upon such themes?' perhaps some friend
May ask, incredulous, 'and to what good end?
Why drag again into the light of day
The errors of an age long since passed away?'
I answer: 'For the lesson that they teach;
The tolerance of opinion and speech,
Hope, Faith and Charity remain,—these three,
And greatest of them all is Charity.'"
—LONGFELLOW.

After the Revolutionary War was over Benjamin, the husband of Nancy Hart, died. Nancy mourned his death for a year or two and married an industrious farmer, younger than herself. They moved to the Mississippi valley, where a freshet came and ruined valley, where a freshet came and caused the loss of crops and property.

Her second husband died, and she was again a widow. She wandered back to Georgia, where she lived with one of her married daughters. Finally they moved to Kentucky in covered wagons. There she spent the rest of her days, and there she is buried.

Nancy had never been a pious woman, but towards the end, when old age had turned her hair gray, she "got religion" at a big Bethodist meeting and fought Satan as she had the Tories in the Revolutionary War.

HARLEY AND JOAN

fied myself—or rather I should say—have verified my fears. I deeply regret I was unable to do so."

Joan was silent. He could tell at a glance that her mind was busy with thoughts of her own. It did not seem possible that a woman who really loved a man could have listened so disinterestedly to what he had been saying. The underlying suggestion that Harley had been killed while staying under cover had brought an angry flush to her cheeks, but he was subtle enough to realize that her anger was inspired by the suggestion rather than from any acceptance of the fact. He had extricated himself rather cleverly from the position into which he had put himself. It was adroit to have accused her of holding an opinion he, for one, refused to share or countenance.

"Tell me," she said at last, "it was you who reported him as a casualty?"

"He was included in the lists at my direction. The phrasing was, of course, formal."

"Ah," said Joan. "That is what I meant. What I wanted to know."

"I gave the same facts to the authorities as I have given to you."

He picked up his hat and cane from a table.

"One minute," said Joan. "Was there any time when Captain Trevelyan walked with my brother and some Fritzies right into our barrage?"

The lumps of superorbital fat on Fawlk's brow drew together perplexedly.

"How could such a thing have happened. Until that day the battery personnel had never been actually in contact with the enemy."

"Until that day—that morning," Joan cried, a sudden radiance dancing in her eyes, "then it was after—after. Major Fawlk I can't begin to tell you what this visit of yours has meant to me. You've put my hopes on both feet."

Nibbling the ends of his mustache Fawlk looked at her in surprise. How his visit could have achieved so undesirable an object defected his imagination. Nothing had been more remote from his intentions. Probably her excitement had no better foundation than the incorrigible optimism women display in face of disaster. But it was very mysterious. Only one advantage arose from it—the tacit hostility of her attitude had vanished and in its place she was regarding him in an almost friendly light. Now, if ever, was the moment to foster the seeds of that friendship.

He took her hand, bowed over it, walked to the door and turned.

"Miss Miller," he said. "I am little more than a visitor in this city. Most of my life, as your father knows, has been spent in the wild places of this world."

"Well," she said.

"It would be rank impertinence to presume that my society could be anything but a bore to a girl like yourself."

"You are going to ask me to lunch," said Joan, with a touch of her old insolence.

"You have only to refuse," he replied, "but if you were to accept we should at least have one subject in common."

Joan wrinkled her forehead, then smiled. "All right. We'll make it one day next week—on a certain condition."

He made no attempt to disguise his pleasure.

"Any condition you care to impose."

"It is that we do not discuss the one subject we have in common."

"But I meant Trevelyan," he said in surprise.

"So did I," said Joan. "Good-by, and thank you for coming."

"I may ring up?"

"Surely you may—good-by."

He left the house elated—if a trifle bewildered.

* * * *

Triumphs and disasters have a knack of running three abreast.

The return of Duesley from France followed by an immediate and successful operation upon Freddie occurred on the same day as the arrival of a letter from Harley and an amendment of the report of his casualty by the war office.

Mercifully the gap in Freddie's memory was not filled in until after the letter had been received.

Emerging into consciousness from the anaesthetic Freddie saw Joan beside his bed.

"I looked for him everywhere, old girl, but it was no use," he wailed, in a strangled voice.

"He's found. He's all right," Joan whispered.

"O, God," said Freddie, began to cry, but went to sleep instead.

Joan read Harley's letter over and over again.

"There must have been a shell hole in the road that wanted filling and the rubbish lying on top of me was convenient for that purpose. When they lifted the beam off my chest I got my senses back for a minute. I heard one of the fellows say I was a goner. He suggested using me as ballast for the hole. But I managed to say 'Don't' and they didn't. After that I passed out again. Concussion. I had had a pretty severe bat on the head. My identity disc which I wore on my wrist must have been torn off when the house fell on me. They didn't know who I was until three weeks later when I told 'em. They are not a bad crowd, taking 'em by and large, but I think there must be an order against smiling before prisoners. It's a wonder they don't make their heads ache frowning and looking baleful."

Joan had difficulty in reading this last sentence because it had been scratched out by a censor. Followed a glowing account of Freddie's doings, also edited to the verge of incomprehensibility.

"I wonder if he got through all right."

"A grand chap."

There was not one word of Harley's love for her in the whole letter. But at the end he said, "I have my picture of you although it cost a man's life to keep it."

Joan gloried in his reticence, gloried in the resolute refusal to share their intimacy with enemy censorship departments. It made her tingle with pride of him. That was the sort of man. That was the sort!

She was writing her reply when the telephone rang. It was Fawlk. Would tomorrow do?

"Yes," she shouted.

"Then I will order a little lunch at the Berkeley."

"Order a big one," said she, and hung up the receiver.

Fawlk had not read the casualty lists and was unprepared for the radiance of his visitor. Joan was wearing her prettiest frock and she entered the foyer of the hotel with a sprightliness that defied rivalry.

Unaware of anything to account for these outward manifestations of well-being Fawlk flattered himself that he was their inspiration.

Going forward quickly he bowed over her hand.

"You look lovelier than a rainbow," he said.

"Joan laughed.

"You must offer me something more substantial than that," said she. "I am famished. I could eat a house."

She preceded him to their table, smiling and nodding to various acquaintances as she went.

The table was banked high with a special order of roses.

Joan frowned at them and pointed. Only one man was allowed to buy roses for her in bulk.

A waiter, following the direction of her finger, smiled understandingly.

"The very pick of the gardens," he said.

"Take them all away," Joan ordered.

"But——" Fawlk began.

"Take them all away," she insisted. "I want plenty of room for the food. This is a celebration.

"I agree," he said, "but I thought——"

"Off with them," Joan insisted.

Concealing his disappointment Fawlk gave orders for their removal.

Over the empty table he made an effort to recover himself.

"It was hardly fair to the flowers," he said, "exposing their poor pretentions before such a rival."

"You've compared me to rainbows and roses," said Joan, "and now let's have it go at the soup."

The lunch he had ordered was above praise.

"Much too good," Joan said, "to talk while one's eating it."

The last dish she refused. It was an "Omelette Surprise" with her initials baked upon its flimsy crust.

"I had hoped you would like this," he said despondently.

"I do—it's my favorite sweet," she answered, waved it away, pushed back her

Constitution's Cooking School Continues to Gain in Popularity

Periodic Courses in Preparing Food by Modern, Scientific Methods, Under Direction of Outstanding Household Economists, Hold Strong Attraction for Many Thousands of Women in Atlanta Interested in the Art of Home-Making.

CONSTITUTION cooking schools have come to be regarded as an institution. With each one that is held they increase in popularity, and at the close of a session there always seems to be a feeling of genuine regret.

These courses are offered periodically by The Constitution to the women of Atlanta who are interested in new developments in the science of home-making, and never once could it be said that the response was lacking in any respect.

The way women flock to these events is prima facie evidence of their popularity. Usually there are hundreds waiting for the doors of the place to be opened an hour before time for the demonstrations to begin. They go early to be sure to get a good seat, but any of the seats in a place selected for one of these schools is usually good. That is one of the most important requirements in the selection of a place.

One of the most successful schools conducted by The Constitution was that just recently held at Keith's Georgia theater, under the direction of Mrs. Vera Howard Hall, one of the outstanding home economics experts in America.

With the thermometer trying to break all existing heat records daily, which would influence thousands of women to stay at home, practically capacity audiences were on hand all four days of the school.

And those who came were highly rewarded for their efforts. In addition to the instruction they received pertaining to cooking and home-making developments right up to the minute, they were in a place where they could be cool and comfortable.

As an indication of the interest that is manifested in one of these schools, women don't just come there and sit. They really show a desire to learn whatever there is new that they might introduce into their homes. They ask questions, offer suggestions, pay strict attention, resent anything that distracts their minds from the demonstrations, and in many other ways enter into the whole spirit of the event.

The fact that many have long since given up trying to put over cooking schools because of a lack of results, whereas those sponsored by The Constitution have ever continued to grow in popularity, is an outstanding manifestation of the pulling power of The Constitution.

At each of the schools some of Atlanta's leading merchants and business establishments are invited to cooperate with The Constitution in conducting the course and to furnish the supplies and equipment for the demonstrations. These concerns realize as well as the housewives themselves the value of the schools and are always eager to participate.

Rapid headway has been made in the present-day home in the use of labor-saving devices and scientific appliances. Particularly has this trend been noticeable in the household affairs that have to do with the preparing and serving of food.

Study of home economics in the schools and colleges is said to be the cause and result of the modern home movement. The introduction of modern methods in the routine of household duties has afforded the housewife real comfort and convenience in her duties.

Mrs. Hall's lectures and demonstrations during the course just held struck a particularly popular appeal. The recipes she demonstrated each day were printed on that day's program, and at the final session the demand was so great for recipes used on previous days that the supply was quickly exhausted and it was found necessary to reproduce them in The Constitution.

Another indication of the popularity of Mrs. Hall's recipes is that almost numberless requests were made of her for directions to make various dishes. She selected some of the most popular ones, which are printed below for the convenience and accommodation of women readers of The Constitution.

MRS. VERA HOWARD HALL

Director of the recent cooking school sponsored by The Atlanta Constitution. Mrs. Hall's recipes struck a particularly popular appeal with the housewives of Atlanta, and in compliance with numerous requests received at the close of the course, she has prepared directions for some especially good dishes which are reproduced on this page.

Your Flower and Vegetable Garden

By W. Elbridge Freeborn

FLOWERS may so often be compared with people in a great many ways, and so the iris may be called an old, and almost forgotten friend. We have known this flower so long, we have enjoyed it in our own garden, have enjoyed it in our neighbor's garden, and can remember it in our grandmother's garden, but strange to say, it is oftentimes forgotten. Just like an old friend, it thrives with practically no attention, yet with each meeting a smile from the friend, and each spring great splashes of color throughout the garden from the iris.

Probably the iris is known more universally than any other flower. Every child recognizes it and enjoys it too. In spite of this fact, there are very few gardens in which it may be found in any great variety of color and type.

Not being a show flower probably accounts for the fact that amateurs, as a rule do not experiment with the iris as with many other less interesting plants. Yet the fact remains that every gardener, who overlooks this old friend, is passing up one of the most consistently satisfactory of all plants.

NEW IRIS GARDEN

Another garden club is starting an educational garden here in Atlanta, and it bids fair to be one that will be the talk of the town for years to come. This garden is being planted on Peachtree circle, at La Fayette drive, by the Iris Garden Club. There have been already planted more than five thousand rhizomes, and in that number there are included more than two hundred varieties. These have not been confined to the more common varieties, quite the opposite, as some of the varieties are worth as much as $25 for one bulb. We hope the garden will be as much of a success as we believe it will be, and wish the club all of the success and luck possible.

If you haven't had the pleasure of seeing this garden, be sure and do so the very next time you are driving. Speaking of driving, the afternoon that you drive out to Ansley Park to see the iris garden, go on out the North Decatur road to Clairmont avenue in Decatur. There, at the corner of North Decatur road and Clairmont avenue is the most gorgeous Egyptian lotus, in full bloom now, that we have ever seen. We doubt very seriously if Cleopatra ever had a more beautiful plant on the Nile.

We understand that the members of the Iris Club do not plan to confine themselves to the German iris, but that this fall they will plant a great many varieties of the bulbous Dutch and Spanish irises and later on in the winter will put in varieties of the Spanish, as well as the English types.

WHERE THE IRIS MAY BE PLANTED

One of the greatest reasons for the popularity of the iris is its adaptability. There is some type of iris for almost every spot, that will grow under the most adverse circumstances. This does not mean that each variety of iris will grow under any kind of soil conditions. For example, our native Blue Flag, and the European Yellow Flag are the only ones that will thrive with their feet in the water.

In the perennial border, the iris is always an attraction. The iris will associate and blend itself with almost every other perennial. The foliage is pretty from the time it starts in the early spring throughout the summer. The fact that there is such range of height makes it possible to distribute the iris from the edge of the border, using the dwarf sorts and to the background, the taller ones.

In the rock garden, the dwarf, bearded iris, the Siberian and Japanese types may be planted. Even the bulbous types are often planted in the rock garden and though they grow rather tall, the foliage disappears shortly after flowering. The average rock garden has one thing that the iris loves, good drainage.

In the water garden, we may plant the native American Blue Flag and the European Yellow Flag. Also, above the waterline, there may be planted the Siberian and Japanese irises. These flowers lend themselves particularly well to water gardening. No other flower looks quite so artistic or so natural growing near the water.

WHEN TO PLANT

The German iris may be transplanted at any time, except when they are in full bloom. The best time for planting is immediately after they have finished blooming.

Most of the authorities suggest June, July and August plantings. The Iris Garden Club is planning on planting throughout the summer and fall in their garden.

In planting iris there is one thought that should be before you. The top of the rhizome is left out of the ground. Work the bone meal into the soil before the root is placed in the ground and pack the soil tightly about the root. One of the best methods of packing the soil is by watering thoroughly. This washes the soil around the fine roots and does away with the possibility of there being left any air pockets.

Because of the rapid multiplication, the iris should not be planted too closely to each other. For this same reason the most expensive roots, that cost two or three dollars each, are rather inexpensive the second year. It is not unusual to have eight or ten rhizomes the second year from planting the original one root. Because of this prolificacy, these plants should be thinned out at least once each three years.

GERMAN OR GARDEN IRIS

GERMAN IRIS

VARIETIES

There are hundreds of varieties of German iris, and in all probability there are at least 200 of these that are distinctly different and worth while. With that bit of apology and explanation we would like to suggest a few of the better known varities that offer quite a range of color. For a white iris, with only a bluish cast, there is Florentina Alba, also Madame Chereau, which is a white with blue borders. For the deep purples, there are several worthwhile varieties. Lent A Williamson is rated 88 by the American Iris Society and is truly a magnificent purple iris. Purple King, Crimson King and Black Prince are all three good purple irises. For the yellow shades, there are the Inca, Darius and Dr. Bernice. The pink effects may be gained by the use of Queen of May and Her Majesty. All of the intervening colors may be gained by the planting of some of the other varieties.

For the most striking effects with irises, they are planted in groups or clumps and will fit in particularly well with shrubs or at the base of trees, as well as in the perennial border or in the more formal flower garden. The iris is growing in popularity as a cut flower as well as a garden flower.

The bulbous iris, that is the Spanish, Dutch and Filifolia should all be planted in the fall at the same time that the other fall bulbs, such as tulips and daffodils are planted. These are very beautiful little fellows and we will tell you more about them, that is if they are strangers to you, during the early fall just before planting time. The Japanese iris are also planted during the fall and we will hear more about them before a couple of moons have past.

DISEASES.

The iris is troubled with very few diseases or insects. Sometimes they become infested with root borer. This borer tunnels through the roots and will sometimes ruin an entire bed if it is not checked. The injured stock should be removed as soon as the trouble is found and it is well to burn over the iris bed the following winter in order to destroy the eggs.

On rare occasions they are bothered by leaf spot. Spraying with copper lime dust will control this disease. It the rhizome is planted too deeply, soft rot will set in. If this happens, it is best to soak the roots in a normal solution of semesan for about ten minutes and replant them immediately. Be sure not to plant them too deeply the second time.

These diseases and insects are very rare, which is unusual, considering the number of pests and diseases that we must fight in order to have other flowers.

Everything considered, there is, in all probability, not another family of flowers that will add to our gardens as much of beauty with as little work as the German iris. As a matter of fact, about the only thing necessary, other than an occasional application of fertilizer, after planting is the division of roots about once each three years.

FERTILIZER

It is generally conceded by most iris growers that bone meal is the very best fertilizer for iris. This is partly true because of the amount of lime that is always found in it.

WHAT TO DO IN AUGUST.

LAWNS: Mow the lawns each week. By promoting stooling and root growth by this mowing the lawn is better able to withstand the summer droughts. Constant feeding is also necessary. For this purpose try a monthly application of some good commercial fertilizer or sheep manure followed by a thorough two-hour soaking. Patch the bare spots with a handful of seed and a bit of fertilizer, both raked in lightly and soaked.

BUGS: During the month of August the bugs usually celebrate with family reunions and it gives us an opportunity for wholesale slaughter. The bugs that chew the plant, such as bean beetles, may be killed by the use of pyrethrum sprays or the arsenical poisons. The sucking insects, plant lice, aphis, and flies may be killed by spraying with nicotine sulphate or pyrethrum. For the mildews, blights and black spot the use of bordeaux or massey dust will be effective.

PRUNING: It is always time to cut out dead wood from the shrubbery and roses. This is particularly true now that we have had a bad drought and many dead limbs may be seen. The sooner this is removed the quicker will the plant recover itself.

WHAT TO PLANT IN AUGUST

VEGETABLE SEED: Plant a good complete fall garden. You may plant string beans, butter beans, beets, carrots, squash, cucumbers, garden peas. Sow cabbage, collard and lettuce seeds in drills to be thinned later. Plant rutabagas and turnip seed for early use.

VEGETABLE PLANTS: Set out cabbage, collard and tomato plants.

IRISH POTATOES: Plant fall potatoes just as soon as the ground can be prepared, Green Mountain and Lookout Mountain.

PERENNIALS: All of the perennial flower and herb seeds may be planted for blooming and maturing next spring. For strong plants that are easily transplanted the seeds should be planted as soon as possible.

LAWNS: Bermuda grass may be planted the earlier part of this month with excellent results assured.

FLOWER SEEDS: The quick flowering annuals such as Zinnias, Marigolds and Petunias may be planted now and should bloom profusely before frost.

Pansies, hollyhocks, delphiniums, aquilegia, canterbury bells, shasta daisy, English daisy, foxglove, Oriental poppies, gypsophila, candytuft and rudbeckia all may be started from seed now.

Civil War Days in Georgia

vard drive, in land lot 207, district 15, DeKalb county. "Fair street" was then an indifferent country road somewhat to the southward of the present locus of the street. Potts moved westward on the double quick, his skirmishers driving those of Wheeler's dismounted cavalry, back to their retreating line. Crossing a ravine (mentioned by Potts) they halted under cover of the bank. Wheeler had withdrawn to the eastern slope of "Leggett's Hill," and the ridge to the northward of it. The ravine, of course, is the low ground along the Sugar Creek branch, just east and north of the hill where Murphy Junior High stands.

This halt was made to enable Hall to come up on the left and to secure connection on the right (that part of the line advanced because of the contour of the ravine), with the 15th corps. Gresham, mounted on his horse, deployed the Iowa brigade (Colonel Hall's) at the intersection of Clay and Fair streets, and their line of advance was generally along or parallel to Fair street. Then he rode forward on the highway that is now represented by Fair street. That he took this road, is indicated in a letter Blair wrote Gresham, under date of August 20, 1864. This road joined, but did not cross, the present East Side avenue, just west of the stream, but south of the present Fair street bridge. Gresham rode up to Colonel Pott's line, now halted in the ravine. Potts skirmishers had ascended the slope in front, where they could see the Confederates on the "bald hill" and the ridge northward. At present, Leggett's Hill is not visible from the hill of the high school, because of trees and houses; the view was doubtless more or less open in 1864, or the opposing skirmish lines were rather close together in the intervening, wooded valley of the stream.

Colonel Potts met General Gresham in the ravine, where his line had halter, and asked him to dismount and walk forward to the skirmish line, where he could observe the Confederate position. One of Wheeler's batteries on "Leggett's Hill" was making things lively just then and Colonel Potts was anxious to be advised about pushing the advance further and "boring into Atlanta." Gresham walked up the slope of the ridge, on which the high school stands, and when near the skirmish line he received a minie ball in his left leg, between the knee and ankle. The main bone was shattered for three inches. That was Wheeler's notice to "keep out." General Gresham never saw anything of our city but a few church spires! The general was carried down the hill, and somewhere near where Fair street (the old road) crosses the stream, he was allowed to rest and receive first aid until he could be better transported to the rear. While at the roadside, General Blair came up and spoke to him, and it is likely that it was just here that Blair made the remark that, in after years, Gresham enjoyed repeating, though it may not have been amusing at the time. Blair accosted him with: "It's too bad, Gresham; I was racing John Logan to get into Atlanta and you go and get shot. Don't you know that might beat me?"

Blair's jest had a measure of truth in it, for when he and Logan found nothing but cavalry and militia in front of them, they did not see how they could fail to keep on until they had entered the city! Indeed, they might have done so, but Wheeler's dismounted cavalrymen realized that they were the only effective force present on the field to prevent that catastrophe. Wheeler sent message after message to Hood, warning him of the desperate situation. Hood ordered Wheeler to fight a little harder, and hold on at all hazards, assuring him that General Gustavus Smith, with all the reserve artillery, was in the city fortifications behind him.

It will be remembered that the Battle of Peachtree Creek was being fought this same afternoon of the 20th, and the occupied defense line of the city was not at the inner fortifications, but on a line, northward and eastward, considerably in advance of them. Stewart and Hardee were on the north; Cheatham was at the northeast and east, and that portion of his line generally along Highland avenue had been stretched almost to the breaking point to take care of Logan's advance via the railroad. Hood finally arose to the emergency and ordered Cleburne's division, in reserve behind Walker, in Ansley Park, to reenforce Wheeler at Leggett's Hill. This order kept Cleburne out of the Battle of Peachtree Creek, for Hardee had just commanded him to advance. Cleburne's division did not reach the hill till midnight.

Colonel Hall immediately succeeded Gresham for the time being, and after Blair had made an inspection of the lines he decided that the position of Gresham's troops was such that any advance on the ridge in front would be enfiladed from the summit of the big hill. A better way would be to order up Leggett's division, on the left, to assault the hill itself, and thus take the key position. Whereupon, Blair sent a staff officer to Leggett with instructions to move up to the left in line with the Fourth division, and assault the hill in his front. The officer gave only the first part of the order, and no assault was made. Night closed down with the opposing forces facing each other from the parallel ridges. It was not until the next morning, July 21, that Leggett made the assault on the hill, this time defended by Cleburne, who had replaced Wheeler's men, and it was on the afternoon of the 22d that Leggett defended the hill against all comers, the two exploits giving his name forever to the present site of the Fred Koch house at 282 Moreland avenue, S. E.

Mention has been made of the 53d Indiana, Gresham's old regiment. The 53d was in Pott's brigade, and was in line that evening in the ravine when Gresham was shot. Colonel William Jones, of that regiment, was old in years and failing in health. He had announced to Gresham, prior to July 15, that he would resign when the campaign was ended. The end of the campaign was now very near for Colonel Jones. Two days later the 22d, Gresham's division, then commanded by Brigadier-General Giles A. Smith, bore the brunt of Cleburne's furious flank attack along Flat Shoals road, in East Atlanta. The 53d was in the thick of that defensive battle, and early in the afternoon Colonel Jones was wounded in both thighs. Refusing to leave the field he drew his revolver and assisted in guarding some prisoners behind the breastworks. While thus engaged a shell struck his head, and he died instantly. Thus closed the career of a man who could have related many interesting facts about the youth—now the man—who sat in the White House, directing the Ship of State through its stormy passages. The following item is quoted from "The Real Lincoln," by Jesse W. Weik, and refers in point of time to the presidential campaign of 1860: "One of the Springfield papers reports that 'Mr. Lincoln was called upon today by an old man from Indiana named Jones, for whom thirty years ago he worked as a common farm-hand at a dollar a day,' referring to William Jones, who kept the store at the village of Gentryville, where Mr. Lincoln spent his boyhood, and who later, as Colonel of the 53d regiment, Indiana Volunteers, fell at the siege of Atlanta."

* * * *

Mrs. Gresham, in her biography of her husband, states that a cousin of the General, Rodolphus Davis, of the 59th Indiana, was close by when her husband was wounded. Davis may have been there, but the 59th Indiana was not, unless the records are wrong. This regiment belonged to the Third division of the 15th corps, and was stationed at this time at Cartersville, Ga., and other points on the W. & A. railroad. Be that as it may, Davis seems to have assisted with his wounded cousin, and the indications are that Gresham passed the night of the 20th somewhere on the field, in the rear of his division. Just where this was is largely conjecture. The mention of the Green B. Clay house will be recalled. Green Clay was living there at the time, and there is a tradition in the family that one evening a wounded Federal officer of high rank was brought to the house and while there was attended by surgeons. Mrs. Clay told her grandchildren that she made a cup of coffee for the officer and a son of Green B., Jeff Clay, then a young boy, and still living at the present time, told J. W. McWilliams that he remembered holding a lighted candle while the surgeons dressed the wounds of a large Yankee officer who lay on a cot or sofa. The rest of the story is that the wounded officer was General James B. McPherson, and that later on they heard that he was dead.

This is part of that Kirkwood legend that General McPherson was carried from the field of July 22d, to some house at the rear of the lines, where he died. A sofa is even mentioned, as part of the story, though the location of the house is variable. Of course this could not have been. McPherson was dead when his body was removed from that strip of roadway where he was shot, to the Augustus Hurt house on Copenhill.

But who was the officer on the sofa, receiving by candle-light, the attentions of the surgeons?—this officer who was able to drink a cup of coffee, and who wore a blue coat with big brass buttons? The capital offence in the realm of Historic Research, is to guess, but that hazard is cheerfully risked in the surmise that the man on the sofa was to be, twenty-nine years later, President Cleveland's secretary of state.

On the 21st of July General Gresham was removed by ambulance to Marietta and placed in a box-car with other wounded men. That day and the next the car remained on a siding while powder-blackened men under a blazing July sky contended for the possession of "Leggett's Hill." Late the night of the 22d a plain pine box was shoved into the car among the wounded men. The military careers of two officers were over forever. When the train, at last, pulled out for the north—for Nashville, Louisville and New Albany—Gresham rode to a destiny of wool-sacks and portfolios; the pine box, containing all that was mortal of Major-General James B. McPherson, was en route to the little cemetery at Clyde, Ohio, near the apple orchard which had been the play ground of the lad who became commander of the Federal army of the Tennessee.

HARLEY AND JOAN

chair, lighted a cigaret and stuffed her hands in very inadequate pockets.

For a while she smoked in silence then she said:

"Well, you've done me proud, haven't you?"

"I am more than repaid if you think so."

"Proud," Joan repeated. "I am wondering why."

He produced a cigar and held it to his ear.

"Miss Miller, in the army I have the reputation of being a bit of a martinet. I doubt whether any officer under my command would attribute much sentiment to me."

"And yet?" said Joan.

"And yet I am full of sentiment. The sight of your suffering the other day touched me to the quick. I prayed if there was any way in which, even to a small extent, I could mitigate your suffering that I might be given the chance to do so."

"Hence this?"

He nodded.

"Hence a bank of roses—a luncheon fit for a queen and my initials embroidered on a bun."

A sensation of discomfort stole over him.

"It was a clumsy attempt to—to——"

"To help me forget the dead?"

"Don't let us use that word," he begged her, with deep sincerity.

"No," said Joan, "we won't—why should we? For Harley isn't dead—he wrote me a letter from a prison camp this morning."

The glass of brandy lifted towards his mouth stopped midway and was returned so suddenly to the table that the stem broke. To hide his confusion Falwk dabbed at the spilt spirit with a napkin.

"Is this true?"

"Perfectly. It makes a happy ending to our wake, doesn't it?"

For nearly a minute Fawlk continued dabbing with his napkin mechanically. At last:

"It does indeed," he said. Then, "In the letter did he explain anything?"

"If you would like to read it?"

"I should."

He read it in silence and handed it back.

"I feel," he said, "I am doing rather less than justice to this—good news. My attitude may not be very clear to you. In asking you to lunch I was inspired at first by sympathy, but I cannot blame myself if sympathy has ripened into a deeper emotion. In the circumstances you will understand why enthusiasm is tempered by a shadow of regret."

Joan said nothing and he motioned to the waiter to bring the bill.

"At least I can express pleasure at your happiness and relief even if, at the moment, my own is not so clearly defined."

"Thank you," said Joan, "but it was hardly playing the game to have expected me to celebrate the death of a friend with souffles—quite so soon."

"I accept the reproach," he nodded, but his face hardened as he spoke. "A soldier is, of necessity, callous where death is concerned. He learns in a hard school to wipe out and pass on." He rose and held back her chair. "But there is one thing, Miss Miller, you can rely on me sponging from my memory. I intend to forget that when the battery position came under shell fire on the morning of the counter attack Captain Trevelyan did not report for duty.

A flush of scarlet covered Joan's face and neck, and her hands shut into fists. For a moment Fawlk half expected her to hit him in the mouth. But the color faded, her hands relaxed and she laughed.

"Perhaps you were too busy running away to know whether he did or did not."

"Perhaps," he replied slowly. "In any case, Miss Miller, that is a suggestion I am not in the least likely to forget."

"I hope not," she said, and walked out ahead of him.

quantity of the drug to a chemist to have it analyzed, intending if it proved to be dangerous to hand it over to the authorities. The other left 10 ounces of it with the manager of a grocery with which he did business. The manager of the grocery store thus came into possession of the drug innocently, and made one or two attempts to give the stuff to the authorities, but after some time parted with it in some way to a young man. He said it was stolen.

"This youth and another then undertook to sell the stuff, and their efforts came to our knowledge. The case was put through very expeditiously. We heard of the affair on July 17, and on July 20 the two were arrested, having sold a quantity of the drug and being in possession of a larger amount. Both pleaded guilty and were sentenced to imprisonment, one for one year and the other for six months, fines of $200 also being imposed.

"The manager of the grocery was arrested, but committed suicide by drowning before his case came up for trial, the circumstances having preyed upon his mind. The whole of Toole's cache of 30 ounces was recovered by us."

SECKATARY HAWKINS

A NIGHT IN THE CABIN

"Hello, Hawkins, you're just the fellow I've been looking for!" sang out Robert Parr on this bright, sunny morning. "You're such a busy fellow we don't get much chance to talk to you."

"I'm the loser, for that," I said with a smile, "because nothing gives me more real pleasure, Robert, than a good long talk with a fellow who knows the woods and wild places around this lake. You know, I envy you. Your father owns this beautiful spot—gosh! how lucky you are, to live here all the year around!"

"Yes," he said, softly, nodding his head. But there was a frown upon his face now. "It's been wonderful—and I've enjoyed it so much. You see, I was rather sickly when I was a bit of a kid—that's why my parents came to this place—thought it would do me good. And it has, as you can see."

"You've got muscle," I said, with a smile; "and I think you're stronger than any of the boys in our club. And you certainly can swim like a fish—"

"Living near the lake has done that," he broke in with a smile. "A fellow just can't keep out of the water it seems. I love it. But it's sleeping outdoors, too, that helped a lot—"

"And in that cabin!" I put in, with a jerk of my head and a wink. "That's the life for a fellow, Robert—"

"That's funny, you know!" he cut in with a laugh. "It's just what I came to talk to you about. You see, I own that new cabin my dad had built for me on Wolf Island. I was going to ask you to sleep there tonight. It has two bunks inside, you know. We could sit and talk until we got tired, and then turn in for a good night's sleep. It'll do you good, Hawkins. And what's more, I'd like to show you all the books I have, and the trophies, and then there's my Indian relics—the Indians used to live right here on this very spot, you know, on the shores of this lake—"

"Don't tempt me with any more, Robert!" I cried, holding up my hand. "Until I can get permission from Jeckerson—"

"Do you have to ask him?"

"Sure! He's my chief. I'm working under his orders, you know. Listen, Robert! Jeckerson is going to solve the mystery of the ghost that haunts this lake, and then your dad will get back all the trade he lost on account of it. That ought to make you feel better, because I tell you as sure as you're standing there Jeckerson will solve the mystery. He can find out anything—no matter how hard you try to keep a thing secret, Jeckerson will find it out."

Robert did not speak for a moment or two, and I seemed to see a worried look pass over his handsome face. It disturbed me, too, for it seemed that Robert had some secret about which he was very careful not to say anything. I wondered what it was. Could it be, as Shadow and Harold had intimated that Robert was playing ghost on this lake, just to get a thrill out of frightening people? No, no, I could not believe that. True, he was a great swimmer. He had great strength for a boy. He knew every spot on this lake. What was it that was worrying him now?

"You saw the ghost last night, didn't you?" he asked, softly.

"Yes, Robert. That ugly thing, coming out of the water, while I sat watching the lake in the moonlight, nearly threw me into a fit. Goodnight! Even now, as I think of it, I feel my hair rising and a chill runs down my back. You know what it looks like, of course—"

"No, I don't. I've never had a chance to see it, Hawkins. I—I wish I could get a look at it, though. Somehow, seems like I'm unlucky that way."

"Change your mind about that, Robert! You're lucky if you never see it! And I don't want to see it again, believe me. Well, I've got to meet Jeckerson now in the lobby room. You're going to attend our club meeting, aren't you?"

"Sure thing! You don't think I'd miss one of them, do you, when I know I won't have you here after the summer is over?"

"Ha! Robby, you're the kind of a boy I'd like to have in our club all the year around. Too bad you're just a summer member. Ah, well! Maybe we will come back to Lake Tapaho next summer, who knows? I'll let you know if Jeckerson will let me spend the night in the cabin with you."

* * * * *

Jeckerson was sitting with Doc Waters in the big armchair near the fireplace in the hotel lobby. Between them sat Johnny McLarren. They were questioning the boy about his roaming of the previous day and finding out what he had discovered before he came back in that old water-soaked rowboat, following the appearance of the glossy ghost that had come out of the lake. Johnny rose from his chair as I came in the door, and walked swiftly toward me.

"Going so soon?" I asked.

"I told them all I knew Hawkins. Are you coming down to the cottage for the meeting?"

"Yep. See you there, Johnny, old kid!"

"I'll tell you all about it then, Seck. So long!"

He sprang past me out the door, and I turned to see him leap clear of the steps, and rush away toward the cottage which was serving as our temporary clubhouse during our stay at Lake Tapaho.

"Well, Hawkins," said Jeckerson, as I approached. "Johnny seems to think he has the whole mystery solved."

"Good! What did he tell you, Jeckerson?"

"Nothing more than we already knew from the reports he wrote in yesterday. He saw these two fishermen, Loderman and Weeks, sneaking suspiciously around the lake yesterday. He risked a very thorny thicket to hear what they were talking about, and so found out that they had been here weeks ago, when nobody around here knew. Now they are registered at the hotel, but they have some secret over on that lonely island. Naturally he thought they were the ones who are playing ghost of Lake Tapaho

"Go back now, Old Iron Man."

I believe everything he says, but why would those two fishermen want to play ghost and scare people to death around here?"

"Ah! Answer that question, Jeckerson, and you can go home—I'd find out the rest of the mystery myself. I'll keep my high order spy system working for you, however—"

"One of your spies doesn't seem to be working very hard, does he?"

"Who? Which one do you mean?"

"You know well enough whom I mean. Look here, Hawkins, every boy has turned in a report every day, hasn't he, about what he saw and heard in the place where you stationed him?"

"Well, yes, Jeckerson—oh, wait! I see what you are getting at now. You mean Robert Parr. You mean that when I showed you the reports from all the members of my spy system—"

"I mean that Robert Parr has not turned in a single report since you gave him the job. That's what I mean, Hawkins. Now, why? What is holding him back? There's a reason, Hawkins."

"Pshaw! Jeckerson, I was just talking to Robert Parr. He asked me to spend the night with him in his new cabin on Wolf Island—"

"Good!" exclaimed Jeckerson. "Of course you told him you'd accept his invitation?"

"No, I said I'd have to ask you first."

"Well, you have my permission. What's more, I want you to take a nap this afternoon, do you hear me? A good long nap, so that you won't fall asleep tonight. Pretend to sleep. But keep your ears open while you close your eyes. And when you hear anything—you know I never sleep at nights around this lake. Too much to see. One doesn't get moonlights like these on Lake Tapaho. Don't feel unduly alarmed at what I have told you, Hawkins. But take that nap this afternoon, and bunk in the cabin tonight, if you want. I think you'll enjoy it. Most any boy would. But Jehosephat! I would myself. Come on, Doctor Waters, our breakfast is getting cold."

* * * * *

The cabin on Wolf Island was about the sweetest thing a boy could wish for. Just imagine one room built between logs, like the old settlers used to have, in the days of the Indians. On either side was a snug and comfortable bunk, fitted with blankets and pillows. The night had grown chill, and Robert had built a fire in the stone fireplace at one end of the cabin. We had sat on the screened porch for a while, but soon sought the friendly warmth of the interior. Robert had showed me all of his trophies—the Indian relics interested me most, and he had a slew of them. He was very proud of his collection, and explained how he had found most of them himself, right around Lake Tapaho.

Then came his books. Boy! if I hadn't seen them, I would have said that no boy could have had such a collection of books. Books about everything under the sun—although I noticed that there were a great many on outdoor life and natural history, to say nothing of books of a scientific nature, explaining many inventions-to-be, and one whole volume was devoted to aquatic puzzles and hydraulic feats. As I looked at this last big book I began to think. Had this book put into Robert's head the idea of the ghost of Lake Tapaho? Had he discovered in this volume a secret that he had been tempted to try, and in trying had frightened away from Lake Tapaho all the customers of his father's cottage colony? Strange how such things do enter one's mind—but not so strange if you consider what had been going on around this lake, and how I had been frightened by the ugly monster that had suddenly come out of the water the night before.

"What is your favorite reading, Robert?" I asked, as I closed the book and looked at him. He was sitting across the fireplace, and the dying embers threw a ruddy glow upon his good-looking face.

"That bunch of papers on the table yonder," he said, smiling. And he pointed to where lay the old papers in which were the accounts of the adventures of Jeckerson and myself, when we had been engaged in solving other mysteries than this thing at Lake Tapaho.

"Oh, I don't mean such stuff," I said, quickly. "That's different. I mean, what book do you really like best? Perhaps you like this one I have in my hand—"

"Oh, no!" he protested. "I told you I like Tarzan—"

"I don't mean that stuff, either, Robert. I mean, what real book—you know—good stuff!"

"Well, I've always loved nature stories. Ernest Thompson Seton for one—I always try to follow him. I've got all his books. He taught me much. But when I'm tired of all the others I always go back to Roosevelt's 'African Game Trails.' I like that, don't you?"

"Yes, indeed," I said, as I reached over and picked up the volume from the table. "You know me, Robby. It was from reading him that I got to love the fair and square way of thinking. You see, Teddy Roosevelt believed in a square deal. I have all his books myself, Robby. I'll tell you about it. You see, when I was a real little kid—"

And so the next hour was passed in talking. That Robert liked it I could see, by the rapt look on his face, his chin cupped in his hands, his elbows on his knees, his eyes fixed upon mine, and somehow I knew that my suspicions about him were all unfounded.

* * * * *

Robby was asleep as soon as his head hit the pillow of his bunk. I smiled as I settled down in my own bunk, across from him, and thought of the nap I had taken that day. Jeckerson was a shrewd old fellow. He knew what to do, and what to tell others to do to serve him. I would not fall asleep as quickly as Robert. No, sir! I was ordered to stay awake, to watch, to listen—

But hah! how weak we all are, after all. I did not even know it, and yet I was fast asleep. I know I was asleep when suddenly I seemed to hear a footfall—out on the screened porch—the cabin was dark—I could not see—but as I turned upon my elbow and looked around, I could see the dull square of the window that opened onto the porch—and in that dull square appeared a figure—just the shoulders and head of a person—but such a head! No, it was not the ghost of Lake Tapaho—I knew that thing too well! This was a tall man, but his head was different—because he wore long hair that hung straight to his shoulders.

I fell back upon my pillow as I heard Robert rouse himself in the bunk across from me. He slowly got out of his bunk and stealthily moved over to the door. I heard him open it, and then for a few moments I heard muffled voices, speaking in such low tones that I could not distinguish a word. Only at the last did I catch a word or two—

"Go back, where I told you to hide! Stay there until I come to you! Don't come to my cabin unless I tell you it is all right. Go back now, Old Iron Man!"

From the corner of my eye I watched the dull square of the window, and I saw the long-haired head pass. The door slowly was closed. I heard the soft click as the bolt was gently shot home. The dim figure of Robert returning to his bunk across from me—

I lay there without the least thought of sleeping. No sir! Strange things were going on around this Lake Tapaho. Mystery seemed to follow everybody, young or old, high or low. No matter where now you lay you down to sleep, mystery came tapping at your door! My heart was thumping against my pajama shirt. Was Robert, after all, mixed up in this terrifying business? Was he purposely misleading me, fooling he, betraying me to that very danger which I had come to help Jeckerson discover and destroy? Could he be playing this terrible prank upon the lakeshore dwellers, and ruining his own father's means of livelihood?

No! No, was the answer. I would not believe it. Robert was too genuine. His face was too open and honest. His very healthy personality gave the lie to the question that popped into my mind. No boy, as clean as he, could be mixed up in a conspiracy to ruin his own father. Whatever it was that had prompted him to be so secretive—whatever reason he had for whispering as he did a few minutes ago to that strange, dark figure out on the screened porch—whatever it was, I knew it could not be anything but honest, clean and above board, fair and square!

Fair and square! He was good, Robert was—drowsiness came heavily upon my eyelids and pressed them down! Pressed them down with the soft fingers of the fairies that close lids before the sandman must needs inject his magic grains. And so I slept—ah! how good it was to sleep out here, in this open, with the smell of the trees coming through the window, the lapping of the lakeshore, the hoot of a lonely owl—

What was that? Again I was wide awake! Some slithering noise—had I been dreaming it? No, there it was again—that same slithering noise—outside there on the porch—

Now I was trembling from head to foot. I sat up and leaned upon my elbow, but I was shaking. I turned my head slowly—slowly I turned it up until again I saw the dull square where the window was—and then I gave a sudden, shrill scream!

Looking in at me was the ugly head of the monster that I had seen out on the lakeshore last night! The ugly, shapeless head of that walrus—it was staring in at me through the screen—and it shone with a glossiness that made it fearful—

"Robert!" I yelled. "Robert! Wake up! Wake up, Robert—"

In a moment the ugly thing had gone. Like a flash, at the sound of my voice, the glossy shadow had disappeared. Robert was upon his feet now—he was over at my bunk, shaking my shoulder—

"What is it, Hawkins? Wake up! You are dreaming!"

"I'm not dreaming!" I screamed. "It's out there—on the porch—the ghost of Lake Tapaho!"

"Oh!" cried Robert, and he snatched up a rifle and was outside in a jiffy. I leaped clear of the bunk and sprang out upon the porch, right behind him. I saw him lift the gun and shoot. I saw a cloud of smoke, and as it cleared away from before the muzzle of the gun, I saw through it, down to the lakeshore, and there was something, big and ugly, sliding into the water like a great rubber ball, black and glossy—

"I'm almost sure I hit it!" exclaimed Robby. "But what keeps it alive, Hawkins?"

I couldn't answer him. My heart was pounding against my shirt. I watched the ripples die out on the surface of the water where the ugly, glossy, black shadow had disappeared. I was not able to give Robert the answer to his question then, but I knew that before long both Jeckerson and I would find that answer, and give it to the world.

Which we did.

Our Weekly Meeting

We boys have been spending a lot of our time down in the shade of the old willow trees that hide the cool banks of Cave river. Good fishing there. And maybe you think we haven't caught some! Oh, boy! I had a catfish as big as my arm last Saturday, and Shadow Loomis says he caught one twice as big. I didn't see Shadow's catch, but I'll bet it was a fish story, anyhow. It's always the way, when a fellow goes fishing—to hear them tell it, you'd think they had hooked a whale, when you can bet your last cent it wasn't much bigger than a sun perch.

My daddy told me it was always that way. They'll tell you about the big fish they caught—but it got away. And when you hear a story of any kind that you just can't believe, you just say to yourself, "That's a fish story." Shadow Loomis has a way of saying things, and whenever he hears something that he thinks isn't true, he says: "It sounds fishy to me."

Well, let's have a contest in which the title will be "A FISH STORY." Don't be discouraged if you have tried in contests and never won—believe me, you never can reach anywhere unless you keep on going, and you can't win if you don't keep on trying. Get busy and write a story or a verse, or if you can't do that very well, just sit down and write a long letter and tell me about "A Fish Story" that you remember. That's all there is to it.

We will now call the meeting to order and present some of the communications from members, and those whose letters follow here are going to receive an autographed book of our club's adventures. The first one comes from a member in Illinois.

Dear Seckatary Hawkins:

I am 11 years old and I would like to join your club. I live at Rossville, Ill. I am very much interested in your mystery about the three-eyed ape. I hope you don't get hurt when you enter the house. At all times I remain. Yours,

WAYNE DAVIS,
Rossville, Ill.

Here's a boy in the Cotton State who has the right spirit to win what he goes after:

Dear Seck:

Glad to hear from you with the book of "Seckatary Hawkins in Cuba." I liked it very much. It doesn't take me long to read a book, so I am trying for another one. I'm not greedy nor selfish, but I just naturally like to read.

There are many of your club who have had no encouragement of winning one of your favorite books. I have felt that same way, my fellow club members, but I kept on trying until I won one. Then, too, fellows, if you aren't a member, come on and be one; if one, be a good one, and go by your club rules.

Yours, fair and square,
VICTOR SELLERS,
711 W. Blvd. St., Dothan, Ala.

Next we introduce a talented new member in North Carolina whose letter of verses deserves some applause:

Dear Seckatary Hawkins:
I think of your rules all the day,
When I'm in work or when I'm in play.
I think of your motto, too, at night
To see if that day I've done right.
I think I always do my part
Because I almost know the rules by heart;
For I have practiced them so much, you know.
For your motto I always like to show,
When I'm to play
I think of your way—
Fair and square.
I like your motto best,
To say nothing of the rest,
Because this club is so fair
That every one may share.
Never will this club go down,
Not as long as I'm around,
For I will spread the news abound
To all the children of this town
About your club and motto fair and square.
Now, Seck, please listen to this poem and letter.
For I hope next time I can do better.

Yours, fair and square,
MADELEINE FREEMAN,
Box 193, Old Fort, N. C.

Now we want to introduce one of our far west members, who writes from California as follows:

Dear Seck:

I have been watching your page for some time, and have become more and more interested in it, and so I decided to write for a membership. I intend to be a very active member and try and win some prizes.

I think that the Seckatary Hawkins Club is a very good thing, because it brings out the talents of the children, and also makes them good sports. Every prize that is won is well earned.

My specialty is drawing and I wish you could start some contests for drawing, but as you do not have these contests, I will try for the others.

I suppose I could ramble on forever and tell you all the things I would like to, but I will close, so you will have time to read some one else's letter.

Yours, fair and square,
PHYLLIS HORNER,
1855 Broad Ave., Wilmington, Cal.

One of our former prize winners who lives in Cuba writes again:

Dear Seck:

Happy birthday! Do you know how I guessed your birthday is today? I read in "The Yellow Y," which my sister won, that the gray canoe which your father gave you for your birthday should have arrived on July 21—and that is very near my birthday, too.

I enjoyed reading "The Yellow Y" very much because I can shot arrows, too. Your stories are all great. First I read "Stoner's Boy" about a year ago, and then "The Purple Light," and now I watch for the best to bring each week a part of the new Lake Tapaho mystery. I want to read your "Seckatary Hawkins in Cuba"—then I will know your opinion of Cuba.

Cuba gets nicer each year, and if you come back to revisit Cuba you would not recognize anything but the old Morro Castle.

I wonder if this letter will bring me book, but if it doesn't, I will try again, for a winner never quits and a quitter never wins.

I'm yours, fair and square,
A boy scout who'd dare
To try hard to win
"Seck Hawkins" ag'in!

PHILIP A. ESTEBANEZ,
Calle E-16-18, Almendares, Havana, Cuba.

And now we adjourn for another week. Get busy at once and get into the contest, and see that your letter or story is sent in early. All of those members whose letters were presented in this meeting will be sent a book of Seckatary Hawkins stories. If you happen to be reading this for the first time and are not yet a member, fill out the blank at once and send it in for your certificate and button.

Bye till next week.

Yours, fair and square,

Seckatary Hawkins

THE PASSWORD.

Last week our password was "Hercules," and by the easy manner in which the majority of our club members solved it, we know it was too easy.

So here goes for a much more difficult job. The letters, as usual, are all jumbled together, and this is what it looks like:

ALOGSUNKME

There you are! It's in keeping with our contest this week—a big fish. As soon as you have placed the letters in their right places, you will have the name of a fish which means "great pickerel." Try it now, and see how long it takes you to figure it out.

A NEW CONTEST EACH WEEK

READ THE RULES CAREFULLY

In this week's contest the title must contain the words "A FISH STORY." You may write a letter or story or verse. Write on one side of paper only. Your composition must be written without any assistance from older persons. All contributions must bear the writer's full name, address and age. The contest will close Thursday. Prize winners will be announced September 7.

PRIZE: A SECKATARY HAWKINS BOOK

Address all submissions in this contest to Seckatary Hawkins, care The Constitution.

Dear Seck:

I haven't been living in Atlanta very long, so I haven't been reading your pages very long, but even at that you seem like an old friend.

I like your colors—and what a swell motto!

I am 12, in the seventh and fighting to finish in four years. I like school and my favorite studies are arithmetic and English, and volleyball is my favorite sport.

Seck, please hurry up and solve the mystery of Lake Tapaho because I can hardly wait, and please be careful and don't let the ghost get you, because then we wouldn't have any more stories—and think what would happen to me in my leisure hours.

A new member,
VELMA SANDERS,
219 Whitefoord Ave., N. E., Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I sure do enjoy reading your page of adventures every week, and I think that they are just wonderful. My playmates and I have organized a little club and we have built us a little clubhouse. We meet in it twice a week and we tell stories and do a lot of things. I have got a lot of your pages up in the clubhouse. My playmates and I sure do have a good time in it. When we finish with the club we play many kinds of games.

I remain fair and square,
SARAH JONES,
Cusseta, Ala., R. F. D. 1.

Dear Seck:

I have been a member of your club for about six months and I like your club fine.

I am quite interested in your adventures and hope you don't let that ghost frighten you when you see it. I sure enjoy your stories also, as anyone can tell by the way I rush for the paper every day. I think Jeckerson is one of the best detectives I've ever heard of.

Yours, fair and square,
CLOTINE MUSIC,
Fairfax, Ga. R. 1.

Dear Seck:

I wore my badge to Camp Wilkins, which is located at Athens, Ga., when I went there this summer with the 4-H Club girls from Jones county.

We certainly did have a good time, and learned to do many things that boys are not interested in.

I go to school at Gray, Ga., and will be in the seventh grade next month when school starts.

Our school colors are purple and gold, but I like yours, too.

Yours, fair and square,
MARY McGINTY,
Wayside, Ga.

Dear Seck:

Here comes another admirer, Mr. Seckatary.
I'll try not to be contrary
If you don't print my li'l line,
I'll try very hard not to whine.
I've been reading your page for a long time;
I decided I'd write you a rhyme
To see if I couldn't win a book to read.
Then, Oh, Gee! wouldn't I be tickled, indeed.
Your motto suits me just right,
Also your colors of blue and white.
I think your club treats everyone so good and kind,
You're so good to the poor, sick and blind.
I enjoy the poems, stories and contents all,
And decided that on such wonderful writers I'd like to pay a call,
I do hope you won't shut me out,
I'd like to go in and with wonder gaze about
And meet people from all over the world.
Many a strange boy and girl.
Your description of your clubhouse makes such a picture to me
That, in my imagination, I can see it, with all the members and thee.
You solve some great mysteries. Wish I could do it, too.
I think it'd be so much fun, dear Seck, just to be like you.
When you get your work at the club all done,
Then you and the members can have so much fun.
Really, you and the club members do lead
Such an interesting life, indeed.
I'd better make my description clear to all.
I'm about 5 feet and 7 inches tall.
I go to school at Cleveland High
And hope to graduate when two years have gone by.
I now bid you boodbye.

Yours, fair and square,
DOYLE SUTTON,
Cleveland, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I received my badge and rules a few weeks ago, which I was proud to get.

I bet you all do have a good time down at the river, for I know I do. We live on an island at Hurricane Shoals.

I have a good time. I have a good playmate. She lives just a little piece from me. Her name is Elsie Boswell.

I am going to get her to join your club if I can, and I think she will.

For pets I have five little chickens and one cat. Its name is Golden.

I remain yours, fair and square,
FREDDIE RUTH DOSS,
Maysville, Ga., Route 3.

Dear Seck:

Here's a member from your own home state, Georgia, and proud of it.

I am 13 years of age and in the ninth grade in school. I like your motto, "Fair and Square," and try hard to live up to it. I like your colors, blue and white, so much that I built a bird house and painted it those colors. I am a Boy Scout who likes to camp. I also am a book reader.

Yours, fair and square,
RALPH L. HAWKINS,
Cordele, Ga., P. O. Box 156.

PLAYMATES

A little boy was playing on the street. His playmate, a girl 8 years of age came along the street.

When she saw her little chum, she ran to him calling, "Billie, Billie see my new roller skates?" Of course, little Billie wanted a pair, but when he asked his mother she said, "No, my boy, you might get hurt." "But Ruth has some and we will play together, mother!"

"Billie, my boy, you might get hurt or perhaps killed. Then mother would have no little boy to love."

Little Billie returned to the street and his waiting chum.

"Mother will not let me have skates, Ruth."

Ruth gave her skates to a poor little boy playing on the street, for they were playmates and she returned to the downcast Billie, say, 'Billie come on and let's be playmates!"

So the little boy and his chum were made happy by making someone else happy.

Yours, fair and square,
JACK TATUM.

(Please send address so that book can be mailed.)

Dear Seck:

How do you like to go to school? You knew it is nearly time for it to start. I am in the eighth grade and I am 13 years old.

What is your favorite game? We play jackstones here. It is my favorite game.

Seck, I surely do like your motto, "Fair and Square," and colors, blue and white. I have solved many of your passwords and I read your page in the paper. I knew that three-eyed ape has frightened you a lot and I hope that he doesn't catch you again.

We don't have a clubhouse here, but I wish we did, for I know I would enjoy it.

Do you have many playmates where you live? I do. We surely do have good times together.

We had a G. A. over here and our teacher is going to give us a picnic tomorrow, and I know we will have a good time, for she is so nice to us.

Yours, fair and square,
MARINELLE CLEMENTS (13),
Morgan, Ga., Box 43.

Dear Seckatary:

I've never been able to get you a letter that I deserved a book of your wonderful adventures, but maybe sometime if I keep trying I'll win one.

Your adventures in the daily and the weekly papers are very interesting, but one of your adventure books would be of more interest, because I wouldn't have to wait for another paper.

I think the boys and girls who have won a book certainly deserve one, for they wrote such nice letters.

I lost my pin and surely do want another. I'll enclose a 2-cent stamp for one, please.

I already have a pin pal and hope to get others soon.

Send my regards to all club members.

Yours truly,
EMMA ROSSMAN (13),
Moultrie, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I think your stories are very thrilling and I have been reading them since they started in The Atlanta Constitution, which has been almost two years. I have every page of your adventures ever published (in that paper) and I think I have a very interesting scrapbook.

Yours, fair and square,
MARION WISE (12),
450 University Drive, Athens, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I have been reading the girls' and boys' letters, also your adventures, and enjoy them so very much.

I am a little girl 10 years old. I will enter the seventh grade this fall. I like to go to school very much, also to help mamma. She says I can cook splendidly.

I like your motto, "Fair and Square," and your colors, blue and white.

Yours, fair and square,
TOMMIE WEBB,
Douglasville, Ga., R. F. D. No. 4.

Dear Seck:

I am 10 years old and will be in the fifth grade next term. I have been reading your stories in the paper—and I like them, too; very much. I am going on a vacation next week. I like to go to picture shows.

Well, I'm still yours, fair and square,
MARGIE RATHBORNE,
227 Winona Drive, Decatur, Ga.

Dear Seck:

Your stories are the best I have ever read. I have read "The Gray Ghost" and "The Chinese Coin" this summer. I have been in bed most all summer with rheumatic fever. Am going to have an operation in two weeks. If I win a book I'll read it while I am convalescing.

Your old friend and club member,
SAMUEL CLEVELAND FRAZIER, (12),
Atlanta, Ga., Route 5, Box 310.

Dear Seck:

I have written you many letters, but have not yet been lucky enough to win a book, but I'll not give up but try again. I know you all have a good time clearing up so many mysteries and Doc Waters sure is good to you. I just love your motto and have not heard such a good one in all my life. Well, Seck, I've just written you a short letter and I hope to see it win, but if it doesn't I'll not cry.

Yours, fair and square,
EMMIE LEE ROGERS,
Waverly Hall, Ga.

Dear Seckatary Hawkins:

I have been reading your stories for nearly two years and have enjoyed them very much. Gee! but I'm interested in "The Mystery of Lake Tapho." Whew! I wonder who the "ghost" is! When reading a mystery I usually can tell who causes the mystery, but in this story I cannot. At first I thought it would be Cabbet, but somehow I'm sure it is not him. I hope Mr. Parr doesn't sell the hotel, which I feel that he won't as long as you and Mr. Jeckerson are there.

Yours truly,
BERTHA RENA LEBOW (13),
110 Seventh Ave., Rome, Ga.

Dear Seck:

I am a little boy 9 years old.

We have a little rat terrier with two little puppies. One of them is named Willie; the other is named Sandy.

My papa has some fox dogs. He caught a fox last week. He did not kill him. He brought it home and tied him to a tree.

Yours, fair and square,
JAKE WILSON, JR.,
Madison, Ga.

Time to Pickle Melons

The Thrifty Housewife Gets Much Satisfaction Out of Making Delicious Pickles, Melon Butters and Conserves From a Waste Product—the Rinds of Cantaloupe, Citron and Watermelon. These Melon Recipes Have Been Tested and Approved

By Elizabeth Emmons

THERE is always a thrill in seeing a new line of jars on the preserve closet shelves, and there is additional satisfaction in preserving melon rind, for it means making a delicious pickle of an otherwise waste product.

The traditional shapes for these pickles seem to be cubes or rectangles, but if the pieces are of fairly uniform size there seems to be no reason why there should be this limitation of design. The small heart, club, spade and diamond cutters make attractive shapes that are very appropriate to serve as a relish with a bridge luncheon, and a jar of these pickles, carefully packed, makes an unusual and desirable bridge prize. If cutters of the size and shape you want are not available, "free hand" designs may be made, using a very sharp knife.

Pickled Watermelon Rind

3½ pounds prepared watermelon rind
1½ cups vinegar
1½ pounds brown sugar
½ ounce stick cinnamon
¼ ounce whole cloves

Prepare the rind by removing a thick paring—about one-third inch—from the rind of the watermelon and cutting out all the pink part. Then cut the rind in pieces of any desired shape, about two by one and one-half inches in size.

Put the rind into a preserving kettle, cover with boiling water, cook until soft and then drain. Put three and a half pounds of the prepared rind into a kettle and add the vinegar, brown sugar, the cinnamon, broken in pieces, and the whole cloves. Bring slowly to the boiling point and let simmer for two and a half hours. Pack in sterilized jars, add syrup to overflow the jars and seal.

Pickled Citron-Melon

2 pounds citron-melon rind
2 pounds sugar
1 pint vinegar
1 pint water
1 lemon
1 tablespoon stick cinnamon
1 teaspoon whole cloves
1 teaspoon whole allspice

Pare the citron-melon and cut in medium thin slices. Soak over night in a weak brine—two tablespoons salt to one quart water. Drain off the brine and cook the citron in clear water until it is tender. Add the prepared citron to the hot pickling solution made from the vinegar, water, sugar, sliced lemon and spices and boil until the citron becomes clear. Seal in sterilized jars.

Another Watermelon Pickle

2 pounds watermelon rind
2 pounds sugar
1 pint vinegar
1 pint water
1 lemon, sliced thin
1 tablespoon stick cinnamon
1 teaspoon whole cloves
1 teaspoon whole allspice

Soak the pieces of watermelon rind over night in a brine made in the proportion of one-fourth cup of salt to one quart of water. In the morning drain off the brine. Cook the watermelon rind in clear water until it is tender.

Make a hot pickling solution of the other ingredients—the spices should be tied in cheesecloth and removed before the pickle is put into the jars. Add the drained rind and cook until it becomes clear. Seal in sterilized jars.

Citron-Melon Conserve

4 cups prepared citron-melon rind
4 cups sugar
2 cups water
Ginger root

Peel small citron-melons, slice and cut into small pieces. Cover with weak salt water and let stand over night. Drain and soak in cold water for several hours. Drain again, cover with fresh water, add a pinch of powdered alum and boil until clear. Drain and when perfectly cold add the sugar, water and a few pieces of ginger root. Simmer for two hours, when most of the sugar will have candied. Pack in jars and cover with the remaining syrup.

If the rind pieces are large enough they may be cut into attractive bridge shapes before pickling

Muskmelon butter, flavored with cinnamon and a few chopped nut meats, makes an unusual canape or sandwich spread

Muskmelon Preserve

1 muskmelon
½ lemon
2 sour apples
2 rose geranium leaves
¼ teaspoon ground cassia buds
⅛ teaspoon ground cloves
1 teaspoon chopped preserved ginger
Sugar

Pare the melon, cut it into small pieces and weigh it. Cut the lemon into thin slices and put it into the preserving kettle; add the melon, cover with cold water and stew until tender.

Add the apples pared and cut into small pieces, the spices, geranium leaves and two-thirds the weight of the melon in sugar. Boil quickly until the pieces of melon are transparent. Remove the geranium leaves when they begin to fall to pieces. Seal, while hot, in jars.

Melon With Lemon

Watermelon, citron-melon, cantaloupe and ripe cucumber rind are all good prepared by the following recipe: Peel the rind, cut in one-inch pieces or slightly larger, let soak in alum water—allow two teaspoons of powdered alum to one quart of water—for twelve hours, heat to the boiling point and cook slowly for fifteen minutes. Drain the rind, cover with ice water, let stand for two hours, drain and dry between cloths.

For three pounds of the prepared rind use:

1 pound sugar
2 quarts water
2 lemons, sliced
½ ounce stick cinnamon
¼ ounce whole cloves

Make a syrup of the sugar and water, boiling them together for twenty minutes. Cook the lemons in a little water for twenty minutes and add to the syrup. Put the prepared rind into the syrup and add the spices tied in cheesecloth. Cook until the rind is very tender—about one and one-half hours—remove the spice bag and seal while hot in sterilized jars.

Gingered Citron Preserves

6 pounds peeled citron-melon rind
1 quart water
¼ pound ginger root
5 pounds sugar
2 cups water
3 lemons
1 pound seeded raisins

Peel the green rind from the citron-melons, cut them in halves and remove the soft centers. Then cut the fruit into diamonds, strips or any fancy shapes preferred. Add the quart of water and the ginger root which has been cleaned and scraped. Simmer the mixture for one and one-half hours.

Remove the ginger root from the citron and make a syrup of the sugar, two cups of water and some of the liquid from the citron and ginger. When the sugar is dissolved pour the syrup over the citron and cook for one-half hour longer. Then skim out the fruit and spread on a platter, letting it stand in the sunshine or in the oven—very slow, about 250 degrees—while the raisins and lemons are added to the syrup. The lemons should be sliced paper thin and the seeds rejected. Cook until a rich, thick syrup results. Return the melon to the syrup, cook for fifteen minutes longer and seal in sterilized jars.

Muskmelon Butter

6 muskmelons
Sugar
Powdered cinnamon

Wash, peel and seed the melons, then cut them into small pieces and put them into a large saucepan or preserving kettle. Cover them with water and boil until tender. Drain, rub them through a colander or fruit press and measure. To one cup of the puree add one-half cup of sugar and cook to a thick butter. Flavor to taste with powdered cinnamon. A few chopped nut meats may be added just before removing from the fire if liked. Seal in jars.
